Begorra if you would see the way they attempt to imitate auld country society up here, it would brake your heart and make a dog laugh. Will you believe me when I tell you, that on Saturday last, I saw Tady Gorman dhressed up as a coachman and perched in front of an auld shandhradan, not worth tuppence, containin four gassy parasols, and the same number of chaste dames and the colors blached out and their owners thryin to giggle through the line of poverty that gazed in at cheek bones and steeped their complexion in one milk to sixteen watthers. Oh! Paddy, dear, pride and poverty are fearful bedfellas; and only that in this country they generally meet in empty and connated plates, they are to be pitied beyond every other affliction I know of. In the evenin I had a thrate with Tady, who gave me histhory of a "half-pay's" kitchen; and how master Tom borrowed his shirt collars, and how the ladies could'nt bear to see a large joint on the table in warm weather, murtha vahya! and a thousand other little thricks that left the panthry as bare as the palm of your hand. He is goin to lave at once, as most of the miserable wages he gets has to go for buthweaver he gets out alone. Poor fella, he's just like an atorny!

People say that we're goin to have the suit of govermint up here shortly; but the poor house keepers are prayin to God that no such thing may take place. Property holders and others of that kith, may bless by the brave and thinks who are payin that load dispinded on the market for every bit and cap shroud the atmosphere. In this parish we were last here, everything was up to the skirts—rents fixed, rhatin, murthered and all; sin you see, thim in the long shed discovery minister months this week in July; and thin it is, that a large portion of the inhabitants are not at all clothed up by the intilligence. Shud I think? I can't help but think there will be a serious rush on thim two questions. The Globe is pledged to the removal, and a portion of the Ministhry are averse to it. Therefor hangs a tale. As far as I'm concerned, the divil may care whether it comes or not. I have a room commission, and, of all goes to all, I can put myself in the way of a wooden leg and a few green backs and be able guidance of some one of the hundhred and forty thousand Americans (more's the pity) continually makin them exile and to be interferers on the gory stage of the present fratricidal war, and who accept to their extremities point in all the gorgeous hues of the soap bubble; and like the soap bubble too, unfortunately, collapse there and come down a wretch of very common earth indeed. Still there's a good dale of freedom on the other side; although at present it's not a little too plentiful on New York—that is if we are to put confidence in the Ledger, and other Southern papers.

Paddy, darlin, do you believe in Spiritthes? To be sure you do, or it would be a cryin sin for your mother, and father (Paddhy that christened you. Well, let me tell you that there's a joker up here—the reverend Mr Baxter—who is goin to make short of us and bury us on the "contemnation of all things," at the rate of a bust. Now me sowkins, according to his interpretation of the prophecies, we have only seven years of it until we are swept clear and clane world and all out of existence, so as that we may as well dhrop the question of Rep. by P. and be preparin to take lave of each other. Thank God that nather you nor I ever belonged to any governmint, so as that we have a chance, at laste, of passin muther we on the summons comes, and won't be met in the teeth by the ghosts of ten thousand broken promises and perfidhies-ta-ta 'Ducency forever," says I; for strike gh an odd dhrop too much, and at unlucky strike he now and then may be brought up again us, sorra much more we'll have to answer for. Oh! mollin, murther, but it's I that pities the Globe and the Ledger. Be the powers of feather, I wouldn't be on aither of their shoes for the wealth of India, for no doubt they'll be both consigned to the same excrept steel Blur alive, what the terrible down below!

Sugar and cahco are as common as ditch wather up here just now. The divil a Clear Grit house you can go into but is stocked wid both. I larn that it only since the election of our City members, that this agreeable state of things has taken place; and a great many people say that it is far more tellin than the sweet little election verses hymns that used to be sung, to usher an indecent St. Lawrence Hall, in the form of John Bull [illegible] to you on it, that it does not do to be too ethayrial and pure in a country like this, where there's such a quantity of pork and pays, and where the "guinea stamp" of rank is rather forced and equivocal; and where poverty and resumption combined are not suffered to cock up their nose and assume airs offensive to common sense and manly worth.

This bein my first letther, and I not havin made many acquaintances here as yet, leaves me but little to say. How somdiver, I get into the way of it I hope, and by an by can some subscription stave up on things in gineral. I am determined to get acquainted wid all the sarvents of the principle people here; and thin, of course I'm as good as in every house in the city; because as the sarvents, either all, first are able to put you up to the ins and outs of everythin, and throw on all the private shades into their proper places. I had a glass, a day or two ago, and a boy in the service of a certain city functionary who has some original notions about couples, ghosts and close side marriages; and by the hole o' my coat, I think I'll be able to amuse yourself and your friends wid some little episodes in the histhory of that same gintleman. Keep my saycret, and if I don't plase you on this head, you can tell me about it.

Now, afore I throw down my pin for the last time, allow you to have all talk too much of what I need'nt mention. A dog-a tumblers or so, afther hours, I wouldn't mind; but you know a quart on an empty stomach is out of the question. Besides, if you saw yourself comin up the afthernatther batin Phil, you'd be a little more cautious; for let me tell you, the divil an inch of the breath as well as limb of them walk be you this called. Give it up, at laste in part barrin at a wake, a marriage, or a christenin or any other gathrin, I fraids.

Let me hear from you soon; and see whether Phil will be home or no.

PROCLAMATION

PROVINCE OF CANADA

By His Excellency the Right Honorable Charles Stanley Viscount Monck, Baron Monck of Ballytrammon, in the County of Wicklow, Governor General of British North America, and Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the Province of Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the Island of Prince Edward, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.

To all to whom these presents shall come, or whom the same may concern.—Greeting:

J. S. MACDONALD, Attorney General.

WHEREAS it is and by an Act of Legislature of this Province, made and passed in the Twenty-sixth year of Her Majesty's reign, and intituled: "An Act to confirm the separation of the late United Counties of Peterborough and Victoria, and the territorial proceedings taken relative thereto," it is amongst other things enacted that the Governor may in His discretion, by Warrant under His privy Seal, of which Seal there shall be public notice in the Official Gazette of this Province, and also in such other manner as the Governor thereof may deem expedient, direct that the Electors of the Counties of Peterborough and Victoria, shall not be required to appear within fifteen days from the publication of the Warrant in the Official Gazette, as in other cases in the twenty-first section of the Act first above recited, provided for the purpose of selecting and electing Jurors for the County of Peterborough for the year next ensuing eight hundred and sixty-three, in lieu and stead of the Jurors then selected for the United Counties of Peterborough and Victoria, under the provisions of the thirty-first chapter of the Consolidated Statutes for Upper Canada, intituled: "An Act respecting Juries and Juries;"

Given under my hand and Seal at Arms, in the City of QUEBEC, in the said Province, this SIXTH day of JULY, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and in the Twenty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign.

MONCK.

By command,
A. J. FERGUSSON BLAIR, Secretary.

The Bank of Toronto.

The [illegible] annual General Meeting of the Shareholders of the Bank of Toronto will be held at the Banking House of the Institution, in Toronto, on Wednesday, 29th of July, 1863.

The Annual General Meeting of the Bank of Toronto (being the seventh since the commencement of business) will be held, in pursuance of the terms of the charter of the [illegible] Act, at the Banking House of the Institution, in Toronto, on Wednesday, 29th of July, 1863.

The Directors in the Bank of Toronto, in presenting their Seventh Annual Report, have to observe that the general business of the Bank, notwithstanding the commercial depression in Western Canada, is in a satisfactory position.

The Capital is now wholly paid up, and amounts to the sum of $600,000.

The Deposit Accounts show a large increase during the year.

The Circulation, in common with that of other Ban

It will be observed that the Member for East has lived under the yoke. That evil consummation previously passed, will, in the opinion of the Board, undoubtedly contribute for the future to their comfort in remembering the Motto there that the Bank can make its twelve mid-a-half per cent off this paid-up capital.

The Directors have to report with much regret the death of their late fellow and President, J. G. Chewett, Esq., who had presided over the Institution from the commencement. In referring to this event, the Board can not omit stating that in him the Shareholders have lost a careful and faithful guardian of their interest, while the Directors have to deplore that one so well qualified for the position he occupied should have been removed from amongst them.

To fill up the vacancy, Mr. late Cashier, Mr. Angus Cameron, who is supposed a large amount of stock, and has been conversant with the affairs of the Institution from its commencement, was chosen Director, and subsequently unanimously elected President.

The building in which we are assembled was erected in pursuance of an urgent call for increased accommodation for the business of the Bank. Your Board have reason to believe that, while built in the most substantial manner, its total cost has been low, so that the arrangements for that portion of the premises not occupied by the Bank, are such that a fair interest will be returned on the capital invested.

The Cashier, Agents, and other officers of the Bank, have discharged their respective duties during the year to our satisfaction.

(Signed) A. CAMERON,
President.

The above having been read, it was moved by A. M. Smith, Esq., M. P. P., seconded by D. McDougall, Esq., and

Resolved,—That the report now read be adopted and printed for distribution amongst the Stockholders.

Moved by William Matthews, Esquire, seconded by Thomas Baxter, Esq., and

Resolved,—That the thanks of the Shareholders are due, and are hereby tendered to the President and Directors of the Bank for their efficient management of its affairs during the past year.

The Chairman then rushed upon the Cashier to read the draft of a new By-Law, which was accordingly done.

BY-LAW No 20.

To alter and amend By Law No 21, appropriating a certain sum for remuneration of services rendered by the President and Directors of the Bank.

Whereas, it is deemed expedient for the interests of the Institution that a certain by-law passed at the annual general meeting of the Shareholders held on the fifteenth day of July, 1858, appropriating a certain sum of money as remuneration to the President and Directors of the Bank be altered and amended; Be it therefore resolved and ordered by the Shareholders of the Bank of Toronto, in annual general meeting now assembled, that the sum of six thousand dollars be appropriated annually out of the said Bank of Toronto, to remunerate the President and Directors of the said Bank of Toronto as such, and that the same may be annually apportioned amongst themselves as they may see fit, according to the provisions of the statute in that behalf.

Moved by J. G. Barwick, Esq., Mayor, seconded by Hon J. H. Cameron and

Resolved,—That the By-Law, as above read, be adopted.

Moved by F. W. Jarvis, Esq., Sheriff, seconded by James Appleby, Esq., and

Resolved,—That Thomas Baxter, Esq., and William Matthews, Esq., be appointed scrutineers of the election of Directors now about to take place, and that they report the result to the Cashier.

Moved by D. McDougall, Esq., seconded by Christopher Barrett, Esq., and

Resolved,—That the polling do now commence and that it continue until four o'clock this day, except in the event of ten minutes elapsing without a vote being tendered, when the poll may at once be closed.

The Chairman having vacated his seat, and the Mayor having been called thereto, it was moved by

J. G. Worts, Esq., seconded by Christopher Barrett, Esq., and

Resolved,—That the thanks of the meeting be presented to the Chairman for the manner in which he has discharged the duty of the day.

REPORT OF THE SCRUTINEERS.

EQUESCURRICULUM!

An establishment entirely Novel and Original in construction, Superior in every Speciality, and including the following

Immense and Unparalleled Combination:

I. TOM KING'S OLYMPIC CIRCUS From Washington and Baltimore

II. JOE PENTLAND'S CIRCUS, From the Academy of Music, Boston, and immediately from the Pacific Coast.

III. LENT'S NATIONAL CIRCUS, From Niblo's Garden, New York.

IV. Wallace's Troupe of ACTING BEARS, From California

V. Derr's Educated S. CRED BULL, From Hindostan.

VI. Wonderful LEAPING BUFFALOES, From the Prairies of the Far West.

VII Professor Langworthy's Corps of PERFORMING DOGS and MONKEYS From all parts of the world.

☞ COMPRISING SEVEN DISTINCT EXHIBITIONS, ☜

All under one GIGANTIC PAVILION for ONE single PRICE of Admission The whole under the immediate direction of

L. B. LENT - - - - - Manager.

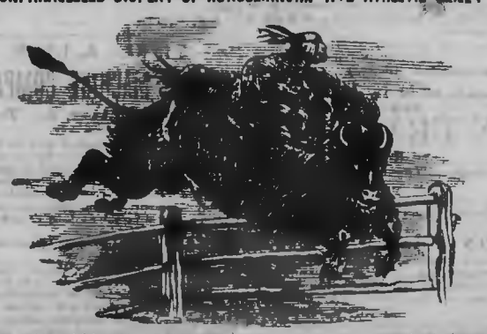
NOTICE.

It will be seen that the combination above gives results in

AN ENTIRELY NEW CLASS OF AMUSEMENTS!

Such as has never before been attempted by private enterprise, and entails such an enormous expenditure of money, that only the most liberal patronage can render it remunerative. The Management will therefore be pardoned for directing attention to the fact that this Magnificent Phalanx of exhibitions not only combines an infinitely greater degree of Novelty, Variety and Effect within itself than can be found in any other place of Amusement in the world, but also a nearer approach to PERFECTION IN EVERY DETAIL. For instance, the Three Circuses include by far the most Talented Array of Equestrians, Vaulters, Athletes, Jugglers, Acrobats, Posture Masters, etc. etc., to be found upon either side of the Atlantic, while the combined collection of HIGHLY TRAINED HORSES, PONIES and MULES include a larger number in the aggregate, and more beautiful and wonderfully trained individuals of each species, than can be found in any or all other Equestrian Exhibitions. In regard to the features peculiar to this establishment, of course there can be no room for comparison, and it can only be said that they will be found as pleasing and satisfactory as they are new and attractive. At each entertainment the TROUPE of ACTING BEARS will be introduced in the Arena in all their unprecedented performances; the EDUCATED SACRED BULL and the LEAPING BUFFALOES will exhibit their wonderful training; Professor Langworthy's Corps of PERFORMING MONKEYS, PONIES and DOGS will go through their astonishing and indescribably laughable feats, and all the principal Artists of the TRIPLE CIRCUS TROUPE will take part in an

UNPARALLELED DISPLAY OF HORSEMANSHIP AND ATHLETIC SKILL!



The veritable and inimitable JOE PENTLAND will officiate as Clown to the Equestrian Scenes. The public entree of the establishment, headed by the Gorgeous Band Chariot, built during CHAS. TOSOLD'S OPERA BASE, will take place about 10 o'clock on the morning of the day of Exhibition.

Admission to the combined Exhibition, only 25 Cents. No Half Price; no charge for Reserved Seats. Doors opened at 2 and 7. Performance to commence at 2½ and 7½ o'clock, P. M.

Will Exhibit at Peterboro', MONDAY, AUGUST 10th

BY-LAW No. 18,

OF THE

Municipality of Ashburnham.

WHEREAS the Board of School Trustees for the Village of Ashburnham, have requested the Municipal Council of the said Village to raise the sum of Two Hundred Dollars for the purpose of building and furnishing a School House in the said Village; and whereas it is desirable and expedient that the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars be raised by Debentures, payable in five years; and whereas it will require that Debentures be issued for the sum of Sixteen Hundred Dollars to realize the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars, and to pay the interest, discount, and expenses connected therewith:

It is hereby enacted by the Municipal Council of the said Village of Ashburnham: That five Debentures be issued by the said Municipality, for the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars each: one of which shall be made payable on the First day of April in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868, and that the same be signed by the Reeve, and sealed with the Corporation Seal. And Whereas, the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property of the said Village amounts, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, to the sum of Seven Thousand Five Hundred and Eighteen Dollars; and it will require that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be levied and collected in each year to pay the amount of the said Debentures:

It is further enacted, that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be raised, levied and collected on the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property in the said Village, over and above all other rates and assessments of the present year, 1863, and in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, to provide for the payments of the Debentures to be issued as hereinbefore mentioned.

And it is further enacted, that a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Friday the Seventh day of August next, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the Forenoon.

TAKE NOTICE,

That the above is a true copy of a proposed By-law which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality after one month from the first publication in the Peterborough Examiner, the date of which first publication was on Thursday, the Sixteenth day of July, 1863; and the votes of the Electors of thesaid Municipality will be taken thereon, at the town Hall in the said Village, on Friday, the Seventh day of August, at the hour of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Poetry.

THE POLICEMAN'S MISTAKE.

'Twas the last hour of daylight—
The twilight had come—
When a weary policeman
Was thinking of home;
But he still lingered blithely
On his advance's wild pace,
For his eye to the ladies
He cheerfully gave.

'Twas the last hour of daylight—
Night's shadows grew nigh—
When close to his elbow
He heard a soft sigh.
As his side passed a lady,
Young, graceful and small,
In the tip-top of fashion—
Hoops, flounces and all.

Only one thing displeased him
(Just like all the men!)
A black veil o'er her bonnet
Was fastened just then.
That her fair face was hidden,
Provoking it was!
But he whispered dear madam,
Are you wishing to cross?

And she bowed, but was silent,
As round her he threw
His brave arm to protect her
And tenderly drew
The great demoiselle closer
And closer, till they Had successfully threaded
The maze of Broadway.

When her foot touched the curbstone
She threw back her veil;
And—oh! oh! consternation!
Policeman grew pale!
Then outspake the fair lady,
"Dear, now, how can we go!
Golly! mamma perceive you
Stop a hugging me so!

'Twas a capital tableau,
Rich, racy, and rare!
How he stood, blank—confounded—
His eyes all a-stare,
Then to find he'd been hugging
A darkey—ah yes!
How he cursed and put, then,
I leave you to guess.

VARIETIES.

Many beautiful women when walking in the street seem very angry if they are gazed at, and sadly disappointed if they are not.

Jeremy Taylor says that 'a good wife should be a looking glass to her husband.' But we think she might and should make him see in her something better than himself.

The Boston Post says that brandy applications are recommended for blackness continued externally until the hair is well started, and afterwards taken in generous quantities internally to clinch the roots.'

Thackery says he once had an idea of collecting all the lies that the English told about the French, and the French about the English, during the Napoleonic period but he shrunk from the task.

An awkward man attempting to carve a goose, dropped it on the floor. 'There now!" exclaimed his wife, "we've lost our dinner." "O, no, my dear!" answered he, "it's safe, I have got my foot upon it!"

There are two principal bores in society from which all the little bores spring viz., there is big bore No. I—the man who knows too much; and bore No. 2—the man who knows too little. Both are desperate bores!

Well find, Dick, that you are in the habit of taking my best jokes and passing them off as your own. Do you call that gentlemanly conduct?" 'To be sure I do, Tom. A true gentleman always takes a joke from a friend.'

'What a fine head your boy has,' said an admiring friend. "Yes', said the father, 'he's a chip of the old block—ain't you, sonny?" I guess so, daddy cause teacher said yesterday I was a young blockhead.'

Some fine specimens of gold from Queen Charlotte's island, in the possession of the Indians, are mentioned by the Victoria Gazette. The Indians continue to be troublesome on the Esquimaux road and passers by are always at the mercy of the random ball.

CAPT. SMITH'S EXPEDITION.—On the 30th of May the expedition under Capt. A. J. Smith, 1st dragoons, was encamped at Crooked river, 157 miles from Fort Dalles. Capt. S. will probably await the arrival of Major Steen on Harney lake, and meanwhile will explore the adjacent country.

A correspondent sends the following conundrum, for which he says a friend of his received twenty guineas in the old country: 'Why is an Irish-girl like a potatoe? Because Irishmen are particularly fond of them when they have a smooth skin, black eyes, and are flowery.

In Queen Anne's reign the Lord Bateman married three wives, all of whom were his servants. A beggar woman meeting him one day in street, made him a low curtsy. "Ah! God Almighty bless you," said she, and send you long life of good desire long enough, we shall all be ladies in time.'

CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.—Bathe the part affected with water in which potatoes have been boiled, as hot as can be borne, just before going to bed; by the next morning the pain will be much relieved, if not removed. One application of this simple remedy has cured the most obstinate rheumatic pains.

WARNING TO GIRLS.—One of our subscribers desires us to state that young girls wearing hats with little bells hanging from the brim will in the short space of three months become cross eyed. He has seen instances of the kind in his neighborhood and is desirous that the subject should be brought to the attention of parents.—Syracuse Standard.

A good story is told of an old usurer who went one day to visit a fellow borrower, who had since fortunately risen from poverty to independency. They went into the garden. Passing along a walk flanked on either side with flowers of great beauty and variety, the visitor made no remark until he came to a potatoe patch, when he exclaimed.

"My friend, you'll have a fine crop of potatoes there!"

"That's just like you," said the proprietor. When gentlemen and ladies pass through my garden they look at my flowers; but when a hog comes in, all he can see is potatoes!"

A man who had recently been chosen serjeant of volunteers and who was not overburdened with brains, took it into his head, on the morning of the parade, to exercise a little by himself. The field selected for the purpose was his back shop. Placing himself in a military attitude, with his sword drawn, he exclaimed, 'Attention! Rear rank, three paces, march!' and he tumbled down in the cellar. His wife, hearing the racket, came running in, saying, 'My dear, have you killed yourself?' 'Go about your business, woman,' said the hero; 'what do you know about war?'

CONSULT THE OLD ENGLISH PHYSICIANS

FOR

ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,
Infirmities of Youth and Old Age,
&c., &c.
NO MERCURY USED.

Dr. Amos & Son,

48 EAST GENESSEE STREET,
BUFFALO, N. Y.

ARE the only Physicians in the State who are members of the Royal College of Surgeons, London.

May be consulted from 8 o'clock in the morning, until 9 at night, in every stage and symptom of Disease.

The treatment they adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years' extensive and successful practice in London.

A most Scientific Invention

An instrument for the cure of general Debility, or Nocturnal Emissions, more properly known as Seminal Weakness, &c. These complaints can be permanently cured in from fifteen days to two months by the use of this instrument, when used conjointly with medicines.

Dr. AMOS & SON, in order to satisfy the most skeptical as to the merits of this instrument, pledge themselves that in any instances where it may prove unsatisfactory after a fair trial, the money will be refunded by returning the instrument in good order. Price Ten Dollars, by mail or express.

YOUNG MEN TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE

Those who have injured themselves by a certain practice indulged in when alone—a habit frequently learned from evil companions, or at school, the effects of which are nightly felt even when asleep, and most cases, renders marriage impossible and destroys both mind and body, should apply immediately. Self abuse is one of the most formidable enemies of man. Nothing else in the entire catalogue of human diseases causes so certain a drain upon the human system, drags its thousands of victims through a few years of suffering down to an untimely grave—destroys the nervous system rapidly, wastes away the energies of life, causes mental derangement, prevents the proper development of the system, disqualifies for marriage, society, business, and all earthly happiness, and leaves the sufferer wrecked in body and mind, predisposed to consumption and a train of evils more to be dreaded than death itself.

PERSONS IN ANY PART OF THE WORLD may be successfully treated by forwarding a correct detail of their cases.

Address Dr. AMOS & SON, 48 East Genesee Street, three doors West of Ellicott Square, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE DEVOTED TO Literature, Science and Art.

NOTWITHSTANDING the repeated attempts which have been made in Canada to establish a Monthly Magazine devoted to Literature and Science it is nevertheless apparent, that success has not been the reward of those who have engaged in the undertaking.

The Canadian Institute at Toronto, the Natural History Society of Montreal, the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, aided by the Government grants they enjoy, regularly publish their proceedings, and thus occupy to a greater or less extent, the several fields which from the special objects of their incorporation the public at large are still unsupplied with a periodical Magazine devoted to general Literature of Canadian origin and growth, and to Science divested of unattractive technicalities and adapted to the requirements of those who do not profess familiarity with its sterner Details.

It is the design of the originators of the British American Magazine to occupy this vacant field, and endeavor to satisfy a want which is so generally felt to exist.

In maturing the plan of a new periodical, it is desirable to supply the public with some guarantee of its character and prospects. It is therefore determined to request intending contributors to permit their names to be published in the prospectus, as among those who are willing, not only to give it countenance and support, but to add to its stability by contributing to its pages. It is also thought advisable to publish the names of those who are willing and anxious to encourage the undertaking by a liberal subscription to the first number.

Many of the difficulties which have impeded the progress, and ultimately led to the abandonment of a Monthly Periodical, of a like general design to the British American Magazine, have disappeared, with the advance of the country in population, wealth and civilization; hence the originators commence their labours with far brighter expectations than their predecessors could have enjoyed, and they anticipate, without doubt or distrust, the successful progress of the undertaking.

The aim of the British American Magazine is to encourage British American Literature, to offer an opportunity long desired by many for giving public and permanent expression to their thoughts, to foster a taste for literary pursuits, to prevent the marvels of Science in its fair language, easily understood by all, to supply a monthly abstract of whatever is interesting and valuable in the periodical literature of Great Britain, and a brief resume of the progress of Literature, Science, Industry and Art, throughout North British Agencies.

It will be within the province of the Magazine to furnish critical notices of new publications, unfettered by prejudices, nationality, or religious bias; and while political discussion of a party character will be absolutely excluded from its pages, all descriptive articles relating to our home institutions, affecting the general interests of the country, will be freely admitted.

Each monthly issue will contain one hundred and twelve pages, of the same size as the English Monthlies, which will form at the close of the year two volumes containing 672 pages each.

The publishers hope to be able to commence their issue in April next, and from the success which has already attended their efforts to procure subscribers, they anticipate that they will be able to present the British American Magazine with a subscription list amounting to 10,000 copies for the first number.

Terms $3 per annum, in advance.

THE WORLD.

AN INDEPENDENT

Daily, Weekly and Semi-Weekly NEWSPAPER.

IN soliciting for another year a continuance and increase of the favor which in so short a period has grown to the World its present rank among American journals—a remarkable business patronage and influence equalled by other journals only after the effort of many years—we renew to our old and new subscribers the promise that no labor nor expense will be spared to make the World what it aims to be,

The Best Newspaper in America.

In politics, now as ever, the World is independent but never neutral. Its only creed is a no less one—of which

The Union, the Constitution, and the Laws, and Free Speech, Free Press, Political Discussion and Action are the corner stones.

The political events of the past year have notably demonstrated the need of a able, fearless outspoken, first-class

Conservative Journal,

in the commercial metropolis of the country, which shall give constant, bold and vigorous utterance to the conservative sentiments of the best men and the honest masses of the nation. Opposing every enemy to whether armed in rebellion at the South or insidiously planting the seeds of dissension at the North.

The Union,

Opposing every violation of the Constitution,

the only bond and hope of union, the only ground upon which we can reborn and compel the allegiance of the South;

Opposing every infraction of

The Laws,

in high places or in low, believing that obedience to Law is service to God;

Opposing every violation of the

Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action, by whomsoever those violations are committed, who her by the exec tive in its

Arbitrary, Illegal, and Unjust Acts

its refusal of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, its denial of the rights and liberties of citizens, its arrest without warrant, its imprisonments without trial, its abrogation of state and federal laws, its illegal proclamation of an empty emancipation, or whether those violations are committed by the party in power, its orators and its presses, advocating measures which must sunder the Union for the sake of destroying slavery, and denouncing treason against all their political opponents.

Loyal to the government always, it will give to the administration a hearty and vigorous support whenever and wherever the administration itself is loyal to the bond, the principles, and the purity of the government.

The World will oppose all compromises which would barter away or divide the Union, for which alone the North is waging war; it will oppose peace itself, till the success of the war has won the permanence of peace, and will urge the prosecution of the war with an economy which has not hitherto governed its expenditures, and a vigor which the nation during a year has prayed for in vain.

The same care will be exercised over the columns of the World to exclude everything which could offend a pure, Christian morality, and records will always be had to the same high principles as well to guard its columns as to guide its judgment of men and events.

All the News

will be found in the columns of the World from the various departments of human activity.

Political, Agricultural, Commercial, as well as in Literature, Science and Art.

New Publications, Inventions, Discoveries, and Works of Art will receive the same careful and thorough attention.

The latest and most important news from London, Paris, Turin, Rome, Syria, China, California, Japan, England, and South America, our correspondents will send to us.

Our correspondents, attached to the various divisions of the army, will accompany them wherever they go, and by the free use of the telegraph and the mails, present in the columns of the World

A Complete history of the War,

from day to day, and from month to month in the Weekly and Semi-Weekly editions of the World, as well briefly, large space will be given to

Agriculture,

and to all departments of

Manufacturing and Mechanical Industry.

The Weekly World will contain an able and serial story during the current year.

THE DAILY WORLD.

The Daily World is the most complete Commercial and News Paper published in America. Besides a full telegraph news, war correspondence, and foreign news, &c., as any two cent daily, it contains also much fuller commercial news. Its Ship News, Produce, and Cattle Market reports, Foreign and Domestic Importations, Stock Lists, and Commercial news, no business man can do without.

TERMS (INVARIABLE IN ADVANCE):

One copy for one year, $4.
Four copies for one year, $30.
For a club of ten copies an extra copy will be sent for one year.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY WORLD.

The Semi-Weekly World is a large quarto sheet, same size as the daily, containing all its news, correspondence, miscellany and editorials, its commercial and market news, and an exhilarating selections and miscellaneous reading. Its cattle market and provision reports make it highly valuable to every farmer.

EMPLOYMENT.

THE Undersigned has for several years past been engaged in a business which has visited him at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum, and is now offering it much to others. The business is of a highly useful and general character, suitable both to cities and villages, and one that any person of ordinary common sense can, with or without, can engage in for himself or herself, and by which they can secure a very handsome income. Several young ladies who have practised in situations from me, both in New York States and Pennsylvania, are earning upwards of $18 per week by it, and others for no reason why any one else cannot do the same. In small towns $6 to $8 can be made by one following it, but a business that is perfectly respectable. Gentlemen and ladies of leisure who would like to learn the business for their own amusement or pleasure, will find the practice of it a pleasant exercise, and no doubt they will take great interest in. On receipt of $1, I will send printed instructions by which any person can readily acquire the art, and these instructions will also contain every particular relative to the carrying it on so that it will be highly profitable. A purchaser of this "printed book of instructions" will also be perfected in terms by letter, and I have no hesitation referring as to my ability of teaching it perfectly to a single individual. I would state further that $2.50 or $3 will buy everything that is necessary to commence the business with, and the article can be got almost anywhere, in city or country, if preferred, I can furnish them. FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

638 Broadway, New York.

ANY parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is specially commended. This circular can be had on application. It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared with much care and we will abide by what it asserts therein made.

The following is a quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"The Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine known to the frequent changing and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family; for it will sew from the coarsest thickness of Marseilles pattern sacking, and make every stitch perfect. Will work from the finest gauze to thick heavy cloth, and even the smallest harness leather, without changing the feed needle or tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

Thus have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Definitely can we now say, "No other Machine compares with it in this respect." If now, here we must say almost without exception—when the big cost is minus, "Beware the Machine has been recently exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.:

"We warrant every Machine we sell to give better satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded."

We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based on mere "talking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch viz. the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one-third the thread of other kinds of stitches.

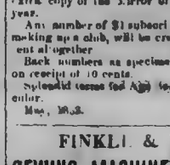
Herrick's Sugar Coated Pills,

CHILDREN CRY FOR THEM!



THIS remarkable American remedy is carrying the world by storm. Over five millions boxes are sold annually. Composed entirely of Vegetable foods, its tonic and laxative—their effect on the human system is pleasant, satisfactory and successful—acting directly on the blood, glands, solids and fluids of the body, their use is attended with the happiest effects. In sudden attacks of disease one or two doses almost always cures. Mild—benign—are of inherent, small dose—repeated frequently—so cleanse the system that good health is the result. No barrier to employment or diet is necessary. They never cause pain or sickness, overload stomach, bowels, &c., as do many other kinds. They are what nature gives satisfaction, or the money will be refunded. They are considered cheaper, safer, surer and more effective and superior to any purgative pill in the world.

☞ The discovery of coating a pill with sugar originated with Dr. Herrick. All others are counterfeits and if cured will do harm, and disappoint the sick. Herrick's pills are regularly put up, 25 in a box, with a large variety of directions, and sent for 25 cents a box; 5 boxes for $1.

AN INDIAN SONG.

BY H. R. H.

An old Indian sat in his little canoe,
And floated along on the water so blue,
He sang of the time when the land was their own,
Before the pale faces among them were known,

The time when the red men were lords of the soil
We lived at our ease free from sorrow or toil,
We hunted the beaver, the panther and deer,
And knew in our wood we had nothing to fear.

When white men first came to our own happy land
We met them like brothers and gave them our hand;
We knew they were weary and gave them repose,
Nor dreaming that those white men would ever be foes.

A while we were happy with white friends around,
We gave them the best of our own hunting ground,
They paid us with trinkets which pleased us a while
And caused us like children upon them to smile,

But soon they began to encroach on our right;
Their numbers increased and put us to flight.
They drove us away from our own happy shore
And the smoke of our council fires rises no more.

The pride of our forest before them did bow,
Our tall pine and cedar their hatchets laid low,
Our beaver and otter their hunters have slain,
And the red deer are driven away from the plain.

They built their big cities all over the land,
And on our rich meadows their farms became stand
They claim all the country from Texas to Maine
And the red man may seek for his wigwam in vain.

The tombs of our fathers, oh, where are they now.
They are rudely run over and torn by the plow,
Their children are wandering dejected and poor
And the home of our fathers we'll visit no more.

Farewell to our parents, our children and braves,
We'll go to the westward and there find our graves,
When the Great Father calls us away from all pain,
In the bright spirit world we will meet them again.

And there we will wander in that happy place,
Our parents and children again we'll embrace,
No more shall the white man intrude on our home,
Or cause the poor Indian in sorrow to roam.

Miscellaneous.

THE DRAB DRESS.

"Brother Fred, I've a favor to ask of you," and Lita Ross lifted her face with a beseeching expression, from a small boquet of choice flowers she held in her small, jeweled hand.

"A favor to ask of me, Sis?" was the young man's reply. "One would think from your serious, troubled countenance, it was the first one you ever preferred, and you were to try an experiment."

"Well it is a sort of experiment, Fred, and before you give me an answer, I want you to think, and not say 'Oh, yes, yes,' as you always do, and then not give it another single thought."

"Well, here goes then," replied the gay, handsome young man, drawing an ottoman to his sister's feet, and seating himself upon it with mock gravity. "Your humble servant. And now proceed to business, madam."

The young girl's face assumed an earnest expression as she clasped one of her brother's hands in both of her own, and said, while the color burned up into her cheeks:

"Fred, it is thus, that you will drink no more wine. I tremble whenever I see you with the glass at your lips."

"Well, now, Lita, child, can you not trust me, knowing my entire self-command, that I have no natural tendency that way, and I only occasionally take a social glass when in the society of my friends."

"I know it, Fred—I know all that: but your influence is what I fear. There is Charlie Chester thinks you a perfect pattern of goodness, and as he touched glasses with you at Mrs. Rearden's, and you stood up and drank together, my heart ached: not so much for you as for him, knowing that he has not the self-command which you have, and that he loves to look upon the wine when it sparkles in the cup."

"Well, well, Lita, perhaps you are right. I never looked at it in that way before," said Fred, while his countenance wore a thoughtful expression. "But who, in the name of common sense (and now the young man smiled,) would have expected that my little fashionable butter-fly sister ever found time for such thoughts as these, what with her ribbons, roses and laces? Seriously, I did not give you credit for being so much of a woman."

"Thank you for the compliment, Fred. But now promise me; I shall not be happy until you do. I have no fears for your personal safety in this matter—though I doubt your moral right to indulge in a glass merely because Mrs. Grundy smiles on the custom—but I fear for Charlie Chester, seeing with what a relish he drains his glass to the dregs. Promise me, Fred; come do this if you love me," and Lita Ross laid her hand beseechingly on her brother's head.

"Well, Lita, this is something of a sacrifice to ask of me. Why, should I make myself very conspicious by refusing a social glass. But I don't know but I'll do it, if you'll make a corresponding sacrifice. I don't care to be immolated upon the altar alone."

"Name it, Fred, and if it's in my power I'll do it willingly, gladly;" and her soft eyes danced with delight.

"Well, then, Sis, I'll promise this thing if you will do what I am about to ask you. I declare, I have scarcely the heart to, you look so pretty in that blue silk dress, with its lace and trimmings, and your ear-rings, pin and bracelet of those tiny pearls, but you must give them up if I comply with your request."

"I will, Fred—I will."

"And wear a drab dress without any ornaments?"

"Yes Fred."

"Next Thursday night make your first appearance at Mrs. Thurston's. Remember, you will be subject to many remarks, and will look very plain by the side of your showily-dressed companions."

"I promise Fred—in return that you will then and there comply with my request."

"Your hand, Sis. And now remember, as long as you will wear drab, and that without ornaments, I will refuse a fashionable glass. But you do not know what a sacrifice you are making. I should not be surprised were you to retract my day."

"Well, Fred we shall see. And now a kiss, as a seal of our contract;" and Lita threw her arms about her brother's neck, and covered his forehead, brow and lips with a shower of kisses, and glided away through the hall, up the long oaken stairway, to her own chamber, and, seating herself, she bowed her head, and ejaculated, "Thank God! Charlie Chester may yet be saved!"

And the tears raised down her face, and when she again looked up, there was a subdued, tender light in her eye never there before.

And this was Lita Ross, the pet plaything of the family—the sparkling, fashionable belle of the season—the coquette, so accounted. But there was in her heart a leaf as yet unread by any eye save that of her Maker, and on it was inscribed her love for Charlie Chester.

"Well, now, who'd have thought it?" Fred exclaimed as he found himself alone.

"I thought I had touched her dearest idol, and that she could no more deny herself than she could give up her right hand. But she'll do it—I saw it in her eye. Faith, I never was so proud of her in my life. I've looked upon her as a mere child of a girl; but all at once she stands before me a noble, self-sacrificing woman. And she's right about Charlie Chester; for now I think of it, he is in danger of being drawn into the whirlpool of dissipation—strange I've not thought of that before! I used to think they had quite a partiality for each other; but they're outgrown it I reckon."

How much we pride ourselves upon our own discernment, and yet how widely do our conclusions sometimes wander from the truth.

Thursday evening came, and Frederick Ross sat in the drawing-room, awaiting the appearance of Lita. There was a light, rustling step, and she stood before him, with her soft, brown hair drawn smoothly from her brow, and confined plainly at the back of her pretty head, and amid its glossy abundance were a few sprays of heliotrope; her dress was drab silk with a low corsage and short sleeves, relieved by a fall of rich white blonde, while her tiny foot, with its dainty satin slipper of the same shade of the dress, laid coquettishly hidden in the thick, rich carpet.

"Come Fred, I am ready," she said. "Am I presentable?"

"Why, Lita, love!" Here he paused. Admiration was written on every feature of his speaking face; but he adroitly changed the expression, and concluded with—"Yes, Lita, presentable, perhaps; but one would take you to be at least twenty-five, instead of nineteen. Faith, I'd no idea it could alter you so much! Come; there is an hour yet; run and put on that rose-colored crape, and take the fastenings from your hair and let it fall in curls about your shoulders. I hate to see you, my little sis, looking so prim. There's an hour yet, and Bell will assist you. Do it now to please me; there's a good girl."

Lita's cheek turned crimson, and her eyes filled with tears. To think that Fred, her own brother, should tell her "she looked twenty-five" and "prim" at that! What would Charlie Chester think of her? For a moment the temptation was strong upon her. But she did not yield, for she saw in her mind's eye Charlie Chester with the wine-cup at his lips; she heard his mother's voice crying, "Enter not into temptation!" as plainly as when she heard her whisper it in his ear as he turned from his cottage home a few weeks previous. It was those words and the look of gentle sorrow that filled the mothers eyes with tears that first aroused Lita's fears in regard to Charlie, and ever since that time she had watched him closely. She did not care to betray her interest in him, as he had avoided her studiously for more than a year; and besides she feared to wound him by forcing upon him the thought that she imagined him incapable of self-control.

But now she had devised a way in which either of these contingencies could be avoided. And having obtained her brother's consent, should she yield it up simply to gratify her love for dress and admiration? No, no, she would not. More than that she dared not. Laying her hand, in its tiny kid glove, upon her brother's shoulder, she said:

"Brother Fred, I shall go as I am, though I would gladly consult your taste and my own by exchanging this sombre dress for the rose-colored crape, but it would not be right in me; I should despise myself. I am sorry you are going to be mortified at my appearance. I did not think before I came below, that I looked so old and prim. But of course I do as you say I do."

"Never mind, Sis. Lam proud of you, let you look as you will. I should not have loved you half so well, had you meekly yielded to my request. And now run and get your hat and cloak, for the carriage waits at the door."

Had my readers looked closely into the eye of Frederick Ross, they would have seen something resembling a tear glittering upon his lashes, which he hurriedly wiped away, upon his delicately-perfumed handkerchief as Lita turned from him. And Lita thought he never looked so lovingly upon her as when he handed her into the carriage; and she was quite sure his bearing was more than usually proud as he led her to the farther end of the reception room, to present her to Mrs. Thurston, the lady of the house.

"Lita Ross, as I live!" cried an imperious beauty, as she tossed her stately head. "I wonder what new freak has taken possession of her?"

"O, she likes to make herself conspicuous," replied another lady, curiously toying with one of her golden curls. "See is all follow her. I should not care to be in her place. She looks like a Quakeress matron of thirty or thirty-five. You'll stand quite a chance for reigning belle to-night, now that she has hidden all her beauty under a cloud of drab."

"Miss Millard, the young lady addressed, flashed a look at the doubtful compliment, and sweeping up her pale blue satin dress, walked stately away.

"Miss Ross," said Mrs. Thurston, bending her gentle face near to Lita's, "will you give a key to the mystery that so nearly conceals my guests to-night, viz: the plainness of your dress to-night?"

"I cannot at present, Mrs. Thurston," replied Lita, "but at some future time I may. I hope you do not think I have done anything improper? I have a motive that you would approve, if I were at liberty to name it;" and Lita stood blushing through her smiles at the inquiring face of the lady.

"O, no, Miss Ross, nothing improper; but it seems so different from your own girlish self, that it causes speculation in the minds of many. But do not let it trouble you. I think it very becoming to you, this drab dress, with its blue trimmings. In short I never saw you looking so lovely as to-night, though not so brilliant as your wont."

"O, Mrs. Thurston, you do not mean it! I am sure I am looking very plain. Brother Fred said before we left house, I looked twenty-five, and so very prim, and I have felt as though it were true, all the evening. It must be your partiality for me Mrs. Thurston, indeed it must."

"Not at all Lita: I am quite sincere in my opinion, and I have heard others say the same."

"Lita Ross is Lita Ross, dress her as you may," said a light hearted girl, as she stood talking to her companion. "Just see her, as she stands there with the light falling around her soft drab dress; but she looks prettier to-night than ever," continued the unselfish girl. Look Harry.

"Yes, Lizzie, there are few faces like Lita Ross, prettier without adornment than with. I know of but one other in this whole assembly?" and the little head of Lizzie was tenderly pressed by the young man, while a soft blush stole over the fair brow of sweet tempered Lizzie Gray, as they mingled with the crowd.

The supper saloon was thrown open, and the tables laid with silver and cut glass supporting all the choice luxuries of the season, presented a dazzling spectacle, under the multitude of gas jets from the rich burners, while the long polished side-boards were supplied with some of the richest wines, reflecting many a prismatic color.

"Miss Ross, what can I help you to?" queried the gentlemen who had escorted Lita to the table.

But for a moment Lita was quite oblivious. She was thinking of her brother's promise, and wondering what effect it would have upon Charlie Chester.

The ladies had withdrawn from the supper-room, but still the gentlemen lingered or returned after having escorted their fair companions from the saloon.

"Fred—Fred Ross, here, take this seat by me, and while we sip our wine, we will have a chat, but the wine I must refuse."

"Fred Ross in a temperance man—he has signed the pledge! Three cheers for Fred Ross!"

Charlie Chester had in his hand a second glass and just as he was about to drain its contents the words of Frank Leland fell upon his ear. He turned pale, and stood looking at Fred Ross, who sat smiling composedly upon his boisterous companions.

"Yes, a temperance man if you like it. I've signed a pledge too, and its useless to ask me more for I am bound to keep it."

Lita Ross had stationed herself near the folding-door, and not only had she seen all that had taken place at the side-board, but not a word had passed but had reached her ear. With a heart filled with happiness she turned away, and at that moment would not have exchanged for the richest dress around, her own simple drab dress.

Several weeks wore away, and yet Lita was never in public with anything but drab.

"It is ridiculous in a child of her years," said a lady, as Lita entered a large dry goods establishment—"perfectly ridiculous. I suppose she thinks it will pass for eccentricity. But it is not; it is downright folly. If she was my girl, I'd shut her up in the house and feed her upon bread and water, before I'd see her make such a simpleton of herself. Only see that drab bonnet, with its white ruche and strings, and the drab cape—quite suitable for her grandmother."

"I heard her called one of the finest dressed ladies upon the street, to-day, by a gentleman from Europe" replied the clerk, and he expressed a desire to obtain an introduction to her."

"Ah, indeed," said she, tossing her head. "Show me some more lilac moreas."

"Frederick Ross," said Charlie Chester, drawing Fred's arm within his own, as they left the crowd who thronged Mrs. Granville's musical assemblies, "will you walk with me?—I've something to say to you—a few questions to ask you, if you will not deem it impertinent in me to do so?"

Frederick readily acceded to his request, and no sooner were they alone than Charlie Chester said:

"Perhaps you will think it strange, but I am anxious to know why you so suddenly left off taking a fashionable glass. It alarmed me. I said whenever I saw you turn from me: 'Is it possible he fears to trust himself? or what has wrought this change in him?' And now will you give me a key that will unlock this mystery?"

"Yes, Charlie, I will," was the ready reply. And then he proceeded to tell him the circumstance that led to this change in his habits, omitting to relate that his name was particularly mentioned on the occasion when Lita especially feared the influence of her brother's example.

"Your sister is an angle of goodness, Fred: you may well be proud of and worship her. If more young ladies would take the same stand she has done, young men would have higher inducements to break from fashionable follies; but instead of that, they smile upon the custom which 'dear, delightful Mrs. Grundy' sanctions, and give the cold shoulder to one who has the independence to assert and carry out her own honest intention. You with your wealth, are an exception. And yet I'm resolved to follow your example; and whenever temptation is strong upon me, I will look upon Lita in her dark drab dress, and call to mind the sacrifice she has made; not so much for fear that her brother might fall a prey to the wine-cup but lest others, who have not so much control, might take encouragement from your example."

After a few moments spent in discussing the subject, the two friends parted; and when Fred related the conversation to Lita, after expressing her satisfaction, she stole away to her chamber as was her want, to give vent to the gratitude of her heart, and an earnest petition ascended to heaven that Charlie Chester might have strength imparted to remain true to his vow.

"Well, Lita, as this rich talented, handsome European who used so earnestly for this little white hand, has shared the same fate with your many suitors. You're an enigma, Sis, and I'm afraid if I do not escort my authority you'll never marry."

"I am sure I shall not, Fred, unless my heart goes with my hand," and Lita smiled a quiet smile as she looked up from her sewing. "Now don't you leave me with such a sober face, for I assure you that I am happy as I am."

"I doubt it, Sis," was the laughing rejoinder, as Fred closed the door, and went through the long hall humming a snatch of a sentimental song.

Two years had flown by and still Charlie Chester had kept his vow inviolate. Lita had watched him narrowly, and every day in her heart she thanked God that this was so; and yet, to have seen them, no one would have imagined that they had the slightest interest in common.

Lita sat alone in the back parlor of her home, thinking of the past, of the happy hours she had spent with Charlie Chester when she was a mere child, wondering why he avoided her so studiously of late, when she was aroused by a tap at the door, and before her stood the object of her thoughts. With heightened color and embarrassed air she welcomed him, wondering at this unceremonious call. A few minutes of silence followed his entrance, and then Charlie drew his seat near to her, and said:

"Lita—Lita, my early playmate, my boyhood's love now that I know, can I can trust myself, will you entrust your life, your happiness to my keeping? Will you be my wife? I owe to you all that I have, all that I am. It was through your influence that I abandoned the wine-cup just in time to save me from an inebriate's grave. O, Lita, what do I not owe you? And yet this very fact encourages me to ask you for more. Say, will you become my wife?"

The small hand he held nestling more confidently in his, the brown eyes uplifted to his face with so much of truthful love in them, answered him. And she told him of all the long years his image had been hidden in her heart—of her fears for his safety when she saw him with the wine-cup pressed to his lips, and of the resolve to save him, and the consequential adoption of her drab dress.

"And it was for my sake, and mine alone, that led you to this sacrifice! And yet you did not know half my danger. I loved wine; my thirst for it was becoming more intense, and only a few months more would have placed me beyond the reach of aid; but you were the 'good angel' commissioned by God to save me."

Lita is now a happy wife and mother, but she still maintains her plain style of dress. She wore a drab dress on her bridal day, and as she passes along the street, she is pointed out as the 'lady in drab;' but many there are who know not the story connected with it, nor that her husband will not hear to the changing it for any other color; for to him no dress is as beautiful as her drab dress.

A SHOCKING STORY.—The Kingston News of yesterday relates the following:—"Some months since a separation took place between a man and his wife, residents of Kingston, in consequence of domestic troubles, and the woman shortly afterwards proceeded to Toronto, taking with her a daughter and a son, the former about eighteen years of age, and the latter between fifteen and sixteen. The mother still resides in Toronto, but a few weeks since the boy and girl returned to the father, and it is alleged that since their arrival they have made several attempts to poison him! The man states that, having several times been seized with sudden and dangerous illness, he applied for relief to a physician, who on examination, declared that his sickness had been produced by some poisonous drug. Suspicion falling on his children, they were closely questioned, and the boy, after some hesitation, made the shocking revelation that he and his sister had been furnished with poison by the mother in Toronto, and sent back to Kingston expressly to take away the life of their father and that of a woman with whom he had been living on too intimate terms, and that he had attempted at various times to carry out his mother's diabolical commands by mixing the poison in his father's tea and coffee! Having told his dreadful story, the lad expressed deep sorrow for what he had done and earnestly begged his parent's forgiveness. The man refuses to prosecute the guilty parties, and it is therefore improbable that any further particulars of this horrible affair than we now give will find their way to the public ear, at least for some time to come."

Propertions for the Exhibition.

(From the Kingston Daily News.)

To Kingston belongs the honour of erecting the first permanent buildings for the purpose of the Agricultural Association of Upper Canada. Previous to the Exhibition of 1856, the Government of the day granted a license of occupation, for the term of twenty years, of an area of about twenty acres on a portion of the Penitentiary farm lot, and on this the Local committee raised a handsome and substantial erection structure of wood and glass; also ranges of neat and commodious buildings for cattle, horses, pigs, sheep, &c., and a Mechanics' Hall for machinery and agricultural implements—the whole costing about sixteen thousand dollars. The main building, or 'Palace,' though not so extensive as its heavy, unsightly rival at Toronto, is a light and elegant structure, and well adapted for the purposes for which it was erected. The transept is 190 feet long and 56 fee: wide; the general height of the building 34 feet, and that of the cupola about 80 feet. There is in the whole structure about 24,000 feet of fluted glass, being more than double the quantity in the Toronto Palace. The building is undergoing various repairs and improvements, and additional room will be secured by the removal of the unsightly and useless orchestra which now occupies a large space in the nave. The repairs to the woodwork, under the superintendence of Mr. George Brown, are rapidly approaching completion, and Mr. William Robinson has made good progress in the painting and glazing. In the interior the roof has been coloured a pale yellow, the ribs vermillion, and the elliptic sweeps and posts a bright blue, the contrast being exceedingly lively and pleasing. The colouring of the outside in blue and white, and when finished, the exterior of the building will present a clean and attractive appearance. The mechanics' hall, a neat and substantial two-storey structure lying to the southeast of the Palace, is being extended by an addition of sixty feet to its length, its original dimensions being 108 feet by 36. It, also, will be coloured outside and in—the interior red, white and blue—which will greatly improve its appearance. The old cattle sheds have been thoroughly repaired and strengthened, and the accommodation for this class of animals has been largely increased by the erection of a new range of buildings on the west side of the grounds. The old range is 428 feet long by 32 broad, and the new 200 feet by 12, both being capable of housing comfortably upwards of two hundred head of cattle. On the west side have also been erected new sheep and pig sheds and a capacious carriage house. The dimensions of the former are 300 f et by 12, the capacity being sufficient to accommodate about five hundred animals. The carriage shed is 660 feet long by 16 feet wide, and will, no doubt, afford ample room for the stem of manufactures which it is intended to accommodate. The old horse stables at the south end of the grounds are in pretty good condition and will require but few repairs. The range is 660 feet long, and can house comfortably about two hundred animals. The ventilation, however, is very imperfect, but the evil will be remedied to some extent by putting an aperture in each door and inserting therein a strong wire grating, which will also increase the facilities for viewing the horses. Another old range of stables, on the east side, is in a very dilapidated condition, and extensive repairs and alterations are needed to render the stables serviceable. It is believed, however, that they will not be required, but it is the intention of the committee to have them thoroughly repaired in case the other stables should prove insufficient to accommodate all the horses entered for exhibition. The double range of 300 feet long, and when put in order will house about one hundred animals. On either side of the mechanics' hall are two tiers of poultry coops, each 108 feet long, and containing 54 compartments—the whole four tiers being capable of holding upwards of two hundred pairs of fowls. These coops are in a fair state of preservation, and need very few repairs to render them secure. In addition to the buildings already noticed, it is intended to erect another, to be devoted to various purposes. It will be 35 feet long and 20 feet wide, and will comprise, among other apartments, a refreshment room and a retiring room for the ladies. All the buildings on the ground are substantial permanent structures, and when the repairs and improvements they are now undergoing are completed, will compare favourably with any similar buildings in Upper Canada. Mr. Power, the architect, and the contractors, Messrs. Brown, Robinson, and R. M. Horsey, are pushing forward the work in their respective departments with great vigour, and in a few weeks everything—so far as the buildings and grounds are concerned—will be in readiness for the coming Provincial Exhibition.

BANISHED TO CANADA.—On Thursday, says the Lockport Union, three men named Thomas Kippen, Hudson Gentry and Jesse B Harry, residents of the State of Missouri, arrived at Niagara Falls in charge of Lieut. George A. Bennet, of St. Louis, and were immediately conveyed acro s the river to Canada and there left, without friends or money, pursuant to an order of Gen. Schofield, of St. Louis, banishing them during the war. The Journal further states:—"The men seemed to be farmers, and said they were ignorant of the charges against them, having had no trial; and being refused a copy of the charges against them, or of the order banishing them. Two of them left families at home. They were not allowed to converse with any one on the journey or make known their condition, and the Lieutenant threatened to arrest a resident at the Bridge for conversing with them."

THE GLORIOUS TWELFTH.—As the twelfth of July happened this year on Sunday, the walk and festivities took place on the day following, yesterday. The weather was very favorable, a little shower having laid the dust, and the air cool enough to make the Brethren enjoy their "walk," without suffering from heat. There was a very large assemblage of brethren from all parts of the country around, and from Colborne and Port Hope. We believe there never was so numerous a body of Orangemen in the town before. The Port Hope Orangemen dressed in blue pants and white pants made a very fine appearance. The various lodges having assembled at the Town Hall paraded the streets to the sound of music from our band and from many fifes and drums. The Brethren having assembled at Boulton's woods, addresses were delivered by the Revs. A. Burpee and W. J. Mackenzie. They were subsequently addressed by F. H. Burton and D. E. Boulton, Esquires. Dinner was afterwards served at the Town Hall to the Port Hope lodges. The day passed very pleasantly away, good order and good humor reigning throughout.—Sun.

The Pope, in officiating pontifically at the Vatican on the occasion of the feast of St. Peter, while seated on the sedia gestatoria renewed his protests against the annexation to Piedmont of the Romagna, the Marches, Umbria, and Bonconte.

A WORD ON RELIGION [SO CALLED] IN POLITICS.

It is right, a part of one's duty, to feel an interest in politics. No one, whatever his position or profession can divest himself of this duty. He is a coward who tries to shrink it. Politics, however, should be kept within its legitimate bounds. These cannot be transgressed with impunity. In politics, as in other things, people do not all think the same. To expect this would be simply absurd. But, generally, in the political world there are two great classes or parties. There are, no doubt, a few minor classes—but these, from their insignificance in numbers and influence, are mostly ignored. The two parties embrace almost all the talent, influence and wealth of the land. Not that all in either of these parties think precisely alike. This, indeed, in the very nature of things, cannot be the case; but there are several great principles which all hold in common, and to the accomplishment of which all other principles are subordinated. These principles may be called the party's centre of gravity. Without their attractive and cohesive influence the particles, if we may so speak, which make up the party, would disintegrate and fall away. A party must have some great ends, which must be kept prominently in view to be powerful, and successful. Men naturally incline to that party, toward which education, association, or other causes may bias them. This is all correct, and they are perfectly right to use all legitimate means in their power to advance and accomplish the ends their party contemplates. But at times there is an element introduced into the political feuds which arise between parties, which ought not to be introduced, and which when introduced is always fraught with consequences that are to be deplored. This is the religious element. We speak conventionally. By religious we mean those sectarian influences that are apt to thrust themselves in when an opportunity is at all afforded. By whomsoever done, the effect is bad, both to the communities and the country at large. Nothing is to be more deplored. Men, though of different shades of politics get along smoothly, well enough, so long as mere politics is at issue. But let some religious question be introduced, and the bitterest feelings are engendered and displayed. Party spirit is intensified to a degree before unknown, and rages with a virulence that blinds reason, and deadens and obliterates the finest feelings of which the human heart is susceptible. But not only does these religious or rather sectarian influence embitter strife and opposition between different parties, but it also recoils with a vengeance, often as unexpected as deserved upon the party to which may be imputed the guilt of evoking it into being. A party, by its agency, may be successful for a time, but merited punishment soon overtakes it.

Raro antecedentem scelestum,
Deseruit pede Pœna claudo.

A party which makes use of this element to effect its purposes will soon find it has evoked the aid of a genuis it is unable to control. Dissensions arise among its members, and bitter recriminations exasperate and convert into enemies those who were before the warmest friends and co-workers. If such then be the case, we think a party, be its name what it may, should be careful; should shrink from the responsibility of incurring the odium and guilt of mixing up sectarian purposes with political issues; of arousing and inflaming sectarian feelings and prejudices to carry party ends. This is a warning that ought to be heeded. It is time. The thing has already been done in our country, and the result is beginning to manifest itself in a way that good and honest men must deeply deplore and strongly condemn. Every little town and village feels, or is beginning to feel the effect of this sectarian influence. Nor is this effect merely a transient one, which passes away with the elections; it remains, and rankles, and shows the cloven foot in every little local contest or squabble. This is deplorable, and if deplorable, the cause of it must certainly be reprehensible. In this Canada "of ours" the people belong to all denominations, and all denominations should, therefore, live in concord, if they would be happy or the country prosperous. History proves that religious feuds, when once started, are the bitterest and most difficult to be healed of all feuds. Why then originate them? why do that which will inevitably start them. Keep them down and people will live in harmony, and political excitement will pass away with the cause that gave it birth. We have made these remarks because we believe the time has arrived in which the people should think of these matters and not for themselves; should trust themselves, and interested politicians less. What care many of our politicians of the day what the spirit they evoke, what bitter feelings they engender, what feuds they stir up, what principles they sacrifice, so long as they accomplish their own ends. The people, then, who are the custodians of their own happiness and prosperity, must be on their guard against the evil we have denounced, if they would be on friendly terms with their neighbours; and they will see, not only their own localities peaceful and prosperous, but their common country free from the greatest curse that can rest upon it.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY.

One of the most gigantic rules ever made is that lately effected by the Hudson Bay Company. This Company, which was Chartered in 1670 by Charles II., and which held for nearly 200 years sovereignty of a territory nearly as large as Russia in Europe, has lately sold out all its possessions, and rights, titles, and privileges appertaining thereto. The original capital stock was £500,000. This has been purchased by the new company for £1,500,000, and stock to the amount of £2000,000 has been issued in certificates at £20 each. At first, there was considerable misapprehension upon the public mind as to who were the real purchasers. It was reported that a new society lately started in London in imitation of the credit mobilier of Paris called the International Society, were the buyers. But this is not the fact. The society merely act as agents or brokers in the matter. The new firm, for their £1,500,000, get 1,400,000 square miles, or 896,000,000 acres of territory; all the late Company's stores, ships, &c., hitherto employed in their trading operations, and valued at £1,023,569; a cash balance of £370,000; and some valuable estates in Vancouver's Island; a large tract of land in Minnesota; and a claim on the Government of the United States, under the Oregon Treaty, variously estimated at from £100,000 to £300,000. So it will be seen that the assets mentioned will cover the purchase money. The new Company which is now completely organized, intend, it is said, to adopt and pursue a more liberal policy than their predecessors. They do not mean merely to confine their efforts to money making in the fur trade, from which the late Company derived their great profits. No doubt much of the territory in the Hudson Bay Company's jurisdiction is very barren and inhospitable in its nature; but there is a great deal of fine land along its Southern boundaries. This would, no doubt, under a liberal policy, soon be taken up and put under cultivation. It seems, certainly, a great pity that our Government was not the purchaser, instead of a private company, as the great North-west, we have every reason to believe, is destined to become, in time, highly populous and productive. At first, there were some doubts as to the legality of the transfer; but it has been decided by the highest law authorities in the affirmative. One thing ought to be attended to, and that is the settlement of the boundary lines. Canada, it is averred, owns no inconsiderable part of the territory claimed by the Company; and as nearly all the available land in Canada is now in the market, it is of the utmost importance that the matter be at once seen to.

We append a list of the Directors:

The Right Hon. Sir Edmund Head, Bart. K.C.B., (late Governor General of Canada), Governor.
Curtis Miranda Lampson, Esq., (C. M. Lampson & Co.), Deputy Governor.
Eden Colville, Esq., Hudson's Bay House, Fenchurch-street.
George Lyall, Esq., M. P., Headley Park, Surrey.
Daniel Meinertzhagen, Esq., (F. Huth & Co.)
James Stewart Hodgson, Esq., (Finlay, Hodgson & Co.)
John Henry William Schroder, Esq., (J. H. Schroder & Co.)
Richard Potter, Esq., Standish House, Gloucestershire.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, July 27, 1863.

The Council met. Present: His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs. Lawson, Carlile, Fry, Dickson, Cluxton, Landy, Burnham, Toole, Nicholls, Ormond, Ryan, and Dixon.

The minutes of former meeting were read and confirmed.

The Mayor stated, that in accordance with the notice to that effect, tenders were received for the surveying and laying out of the land at the South end of the Town. The lowest tender being $85 and the highest $400.

The Mayor also stated that an emigrant agent had waited upon him, who was anxious that the Town should undertake to receive three families of emigrants.

A petition from the Butchers, praying the Council to remove the Lock-up from the Market building, and not build the new Lock-up adjoining the Market House, was read and received.

A petition from the Volunteer Companies asking the Council the use of the old Burying ground for the purpose of a drill ground was read and received.

Mr. Cluxton gave notice of his intention to introduce a By-law to repeal and amend the By-laws in reference to the erection of buildings.

On motion of Mr. Burnham, the prayer of the petition of the volunteers was granted, as far as the power of the Council was concerned.

The Committee on Finance recommended the payment of several accounts, but that of Thos. White Jr., for $100, for services as parliamentary agent at Quebec, they could not recommend.

A report of the special committee to whom was referred the plans of Mr. T. Nicholl for a Lock-up was read and received.

Mr. Cluxton, introduced and read a first time, a By-law for Cutting down the hill on Murray Street, and of grading said street between Water Street, and Dickson's Raceway.

On motion of Mr. Toole, the sum of $50 was ordered to be appropriated for levelling and trimming up and improving the Protestant part of the old Burying ground, to be spent under the superintendence of Messrs Lawson and Carlile.

Moved by Mr. Burnham and seconded by Mr. Landy, that an Engine House be built 20 by 40 feet and 10 feet high of brick, with shingles laid in mortar, with the addition of a wing thereto for two rooms for a lock-up, and that Messrs Carlile, Toole and Fry be a committe to carry out the object of this resolution; and to advertise for tenders therefor, and to contract for the building of the same, at an expense not exceeding £100, to be built on Charlotta Street, on or near the South East corner of the Market Block.

In amendment it was moved by Mr. Cluxton and seconded by Mr. Nicholls, that the resolution lie over until next meeting of the Council, and that it be considered as a notice of motion.

The amendment was carried.

The Council then adjourned for one week.

Company Drill,—Section 4.

A COMPANY WHEELING FROM THE HALT FROM COLUMN INTO LINE.

(Answers.)

45—As a Company in column, right in front.
46—One pace in front of the second file from the left.
46—He will run to the front and mark the spot where the right of the Company will rest.

72—Backwards on the right.

THE 12th AT MOUNT PLEASANT.

The Orangemen's turn out in Mt. Pleasant was a very imposing one. Lodges from a distance met with their brethren in procession and marched through the streets, after which they sat down to refreshments at the Hotels kept by Messrs Kells and Patterson, (Mr. Kells is a new comer to the Village and keeps very good accomodations). After satisfying the inner man, the brethren formed in procession and marched to a beautiful grove, where they were addressed by Messrs Ewing and Allan. The Mount Pleasant Brass Band added greatly to the amusement of the day, by playing several tunes fitting for the occasion.

CONCERT.—We draw the attention of our readers to the advertisement of a grand Concert, in aid of the Peterboro' Skating Rink fund. This Concert, in our opinion, ought to be largely attended, especially by those who had such a good time on the ice last winter. It seems the managers, in their efforts to please the public and give satisfaction, incurred more expense than was intended—in fact, they are, or will be, considerably out of pocket, if the people don't give them a bumper house, as they should do, this evening. From the names mentioned, and from our knowledge as to who the "amateurs" are, we can promise all a "merry pleasant" evening.

ROCHESTER.—By reference to our advertising columns, it will be seen that this new steamer, after a slight delay, has resumed her trips between Canada and the United States. Having all her Cabins refitted, and very elegantly furnished, she will prove to be a great comfort and accommodation to the people of Central Canada, who may have business on the other side. The greatest credit is due Mr. Daintry, for his enterprise in superseding the old slow and boorish manner of crossing the Lake, to which the public have had to submit for the last twelve months. For particulars of freight, passage, &c., information may be obtained from W. J. Fowler, Esq., who has been appointed the Agent for this place.

THE Peterboro' Volunteer Band desires to express their thanks to Mr. Kimball and the mechanics of the Port Hope and Peterboro' Railway for the contribution of the sum of $10, towards the fund of the said Band.

W. PHILP,
Band Master.

CRICKET.—Peterborough vs. Lakefield. A match between these two Clubs, is to be played on the Peterborough Cricket Club ground to-day, wickets pitched at 10 o'clock sharp.

LANTY MULLINS' LETTERS.

TORONTO, PARK LANE—THAT WIG—
27th July, 1863.

To Paddy Mahiny, Ould Dinny's Son, Petherboro, Kinnada West.

Oh! this Paddy allanth, if this isn't the quare place, and the quare people here. The presbitating people aren't a quare nit, my name's not Lanty Mullins. Bornah such conshines and plinths iver was known in any other part of the globe—I dont mane the newspaper—as are always goin on here. Pon me sowkins, its thru'h I tell you, when I say, that the divil a pound keeper you could be here without puttin your hand in your pocket and grazin the corel of every fella's fist that has got a single happorth to say in the matther. Be the man o' the moon, but it says little for the work of the Clargy among us, although I hear they're ravin at home, in parts of the ould Country, bekase the Prince of Wales gave a dacent dinner to some of his frinds on a Sunday. Oh! God be wid the time when an innocent dance at the ind of a shaded boreen was considhered naithar a sin nor a shame afther mass by the good man who christened us both; and do you know what I think, Paddy? I think that if there was a little more liberality, in this relation, up here regardin poor thrades people and laborin min who are pinned up the rest of the week, there would be less dhrinkin, and saloon and tavern buntin on the day itself, than there now is. Rational amusemint and relaxation from the cares and toils of our earthly sojurn, can niver be offensive to the Great Arahitect of our being; and he who asserts otherwise, is either a dolt, a fanatic, or a knave. There's for you, me bouchal: and dont you think there was a dacent Father Lanty Mullins spoilt the day they refused to make that same of me.

We are all in a state of con thernation up here; but what it's all for, the divil a bit of me knows. Upper Kinnada seems to think that her cake is dough betune the Yankees and the Frinch down below. The lattber, it is thought, wont let the asit of Government up here; while should they happen to allow it to thravel up this way, it's supposed the former will take it from us body and bones, and may be ourselves too into the bargain. Now without dwellin over long on one part of the subject, I think I am safe in observin that brother Jonathan has his hands full enough already; and that afther he gets through wid his own little family quarrel, he'll be engaged for the next half cinthury, at laste, in puttin his shattered ribs in ordher and makin rale shin plasthers in airnest. Rely upon it, he'll have enough to do any way, in keepin the South up to the mark, if he iver gains a permanent footin there; for there are plinty of widows and orphans and bereaved young min and maidins in that same place who will be gropin in the dark for revinge if they daren't show themselves in broad daylight, and will keep up the sarch while our heads are hot.

You persave that our ould frind, Mr. McGee, has got out a histhory of Ireland; and let me tell you, that a beautiful one it is. The first pietber in it, is of the darlin crathure that in oulden times wint all round the green isle dhressed in jewels and diamonds and barin a goold ging on her wand. If she thravelled it to-day, mavourneen, I think she would be a little more secure undher the protaction of a good black thorn wid about three inches of a gun barrel at the ind of it. All the chivaldhry is squeized out of the land by the middle min and the large proprietors, and wid the chivaldhry all the proud honesty of the inhabitants has disappeared. Paddy Mahiny, will iver ould Ireland hould up her head again?

When the House meets, I believe they're goin to have grate work of it. Bad cess to me, but I like to be down at Quabeck on that same occasion, and see how they'd behave themselves. Our frind Darcy's secession from the ranks of the Ministhry will be no help to them; for as you well know he has a dhrandful mimmory and the divil's own tongue in his head. Be the powers of peather, I rally think that that same joker remimbers the very night he was born; but if he does'nt, allanah, sure your father does, at last, as that unfortunate limp he got in the fight, to this day bears sad witness. I never barde how many was engaged on that occasion; but I got a hint that nearly all the town land were let into it afterwards, and that four of the Doolans came to their death through it. Paddy, you may well say that the ex-president of the Council was born to make a stir in the world, however he may finish his days. My own opinion is, nevertheless, that the Queen of England will soon take a frindly boult of him and make him a Knight or somethin of the sort; for don't you see, that the divil a thing less will do him, then to have one of her sons out here as a king—if we are to bleeve all he says; although it's my idaya that he wants to start a monarchy here by way of revinging himself on Archbishop Hughes, of New York, and the Yankees who thrated him rather indifferently when he was over there publishin the Celt newspaper. I know that most of us in this colony are monarchial in their tendencies; but then the question comes, can we support a king decently and thrate him in the manner best calculated to sustain his dignity and that of the people. Faith I'm thinkin that if he did'nt take part with aither the Globe or the Ladher, or make a batch of noblemin every fortnight, it would be all up wid him. Still, and wid all, I believe in Darcy's system; but I'm afraid that he's inthroducin it too soon into the field, and rather in too grate a hape. Before he can succeed, the Legislate Council must go back to its Life Memberships, and the offices in the gift of the Crown must not be pitched about by every musharoon of an Inspecther who may be created to carry out the spleen of certain politicians, or meet the democratic views of rale republicans among us. Paddy, my word to you, you can scarcely imagine the number of genuine, live Yankees that are up here, workin thimselves into our institutions and influincin our municipal and national destinees. The grudge they owe to the ould conthry ginnerally, is quietly made apparent upon every occasion that they considher safe; and thus it is, that we are smoothly dhriftin down the sthrame to the verge of that fearful precipice which all well constructed undherstandin's seek to avoid.

Let me here from you soon, and give me all the information that you can scrape up. Business up here is very dull; and I'm thinkin that the Customs rivenue will fall a good dale short of what was expected earlier in the saison. Merchants, however, believe that the fall importations will be rather brisk; as the crops are good and the farmers are not so down-mouthed as they have been. We have had floods of rain here lately; but only in fits; and forthunately fine dhry winds comin immadiately afther them, wiped thim all up and made the whate and the hay as dhry as a bone. If Paley keeps the little still yet, tell him to sind me up a five gallon kag, as there's not a dhrop worth dhrinkin here, everythin being dhrugged that comes into the city. I am done now; and have only room to subscribe myself,

Yours to command,
LANTY MULLINS.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

HEAD QUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, July 25.—The Confederates were in force yesterday near Port Royal. We drove their cavalry from Maquoms Gap, about sunset. It is now believed that the Confederates intend to cross the River at Chantilly or Thornton's Gap. At the former place they would meet with obstacles. Our army is full of high expectations.

Washington, July 25.—The following has just been received at headquarters from Gen. Scammon:

'Charleston, Va., July 24.—To Gen. Kelley—Col. Tolland, with the Second Virginia Cavalry and the 34th Ohio mounted infantry, cut the railroad at Wytheville and destroyed two pieces of artillery, 800 muskets and a large amount of ammunition and stores and had a sharp fight in Wytheville. They captured 125 prisoners who were paroled, killed 75, wounded not known. Our loss was 78 killed, wounded and missing; among the killed were Col. Tolland and Captain Delany. Col. Powell is very dangerously wounded and is a prisoner. We were fired on from houses public and private, by the citizens even by the women. My men totally destroyed the town. They reached Wytheville yesterday after a march of 30 miles.

E. P. SCAMMON.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF, 14th Corps, Port Hudson, July 10.—Sir,—I have the honor to inform you that with this there fell into our hands over 5,500 prisoners, including one Major-General, one Brigade-General, twenty pieces of heavy artillery, five complete batteries (numbering thirty one pieces) of field artillery, a good supply of projectiles for line and heavy guns, 44,800 lbs. of cannon powder, 5,000 stand of arms 150,000 rounds of small arm ammunition, besides a small amount of stores of various kinds. We captured also two steamers, one of which is very valuable. They will be of great service at this time.

I am, General, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

(Signed) N. P. BANKS.
To General Halleck, Washington.

Charleston, July 18.—Five monitors and five gunboats and mortar boats, assisted by two land batteries mounting five guns, have fired furiously at Fort Wagner all day. One of our gun carriages was dismounted.

(Signed) G. T. BEAUREGARD.

'Charleston, July 19.—After a furious bombardment of eleven hours, the enemy assaulted battery Wagner desperately and repeatedly. Our people fought desperately and repulsed the attack with great slaughter. Our loss was comparatively light, but includes many valuable officers. Brigadier-General Taliferro commanded on our side.

(Signed) G. T. BEAUREGARD.

The Richmond Whig has the following despatch:—

'Charleston, July 22.—The enemy commenced shelling again with but few casualties on our side. We had in the battle of the 18th inst. 150 killed and wounded. The loss of the Federals in killed and wounded and prisoners was about 2,000. Nearly 800 were buried under a flag of truce. Col. Putman, Acting Brigadier-General, and Col. Shaw, commanding a negro regiment were killed.'

The Whig says that the Yankee prisoners captured in Gettysburg succeeded in getting 'on to Richmond' and were sent to Isle Camp.

Cleveland, July 26.—Major Way, with 250 of the 9th Michigan cavalry, forced Morgan to an engagement at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, 3 mile from Salineville, Ohio, and routed him, capturing 240 prisoners, Morgan and 300 men escaped, but they were all captured by Shackleford at 3 p.m. on Sunday near New Lisbon. Morgan and staff are now prisoners at Wellsville, Ohio.

Leavenworth, July 26.—On Thursday the 16th inst. a severe fight occurred between the forces under General Blunt, and Gen. Cooper's Confederate force, resulting in the complete route of the latter. Finding that the Confederates had fallen back from Fort Gibson, Gen. Blunt, with 2,400 men and 12 guns, left in pursuit. After marching 50 miles in 24 hours, he found the enemy 5,000 strong in position on Elk Creek. Gen. Blunt immediately attacked the Confederates. Our artillery dismounted two Confederate guns which were captured. A charge was finally made when the enemy fled in confusion our cavalry pursuing. When the courier left the Confederate loss was 60 killed, 24 wounded and 100 prisoners. Our loss was 10 killed and 30 wounded. We captured a quantity of commissary stores. General Blunt though sick commanded in person.

In reply to a letter of congratulation on his recovery, sent to Garibaldi by the "Sclave emigration of the South," the patriot has forwarded the following answer:

My good friends: I am truly grateful for your congratulations. In misfortune all men are brothers; oppressed people have the common cause. Let us unite them, and raise our voice till it shakes the throne of every remaining tyrant. It is no question now of regaining united nationality. No, the hour is come when all nations must rise in arms for universal liberty.

GARIBALDI.

The following is the official text of a letter addressed by King George I. to the National Assembly of Greece:

GENTLEMEN: Obedient to the dictates of my heart, I wished to accompany by the personal testimony of my sentiments the message by which the King of Denmark accepts for me the crown which the Hellenic nation calls me to war. I shall proceed to my new country with transport, in order to prove to you that from the present moment I know no other duty than to live and die as a good Greek, for the happiness and independence of the nation; and I am convinced, gentlemen, that, with your aid, by the friendship of the powers, and above all the assistance of God, the interests of the country, henceforth my own, will prosper to its advantage. I am happy and proud, gentlemen, to be able to salute you by the voice of those good and noble patriots who, named by your confidence, have came here, far from their country, to salute me as your king. They will tell you that they have found me full of sympathy for my new country; and that I ardently desire to be able soon to find myself in the midst of you. Accept me, gentlemen, with some confidence that animates my heart for you, and teach me to labor with you for the happiness of my fine country, which may God protect.

GEORGE I.

This letter was conveyed to Athens by Admiral Canaris, M. Zaimios, and M. Grivas, members of the commission sent to Copenhagen to offer the crown to the prince.

How Sumpter is being Revenged.

The Confederates have killed 22,874 more of our men than we have of theirs.

They have wounded, (not mortally, 39,414 more of our men than we have of theirs.

250,000 more of our men have died of disease and wounds than of theirs.

They have made prisoners of 46,000 more of our men than we have of theirs.

Our total casualties are 237,237 more than theirs—that is, our casualities have been 14,000 more than as much again as theirs.

This is the way we have "revenged the firing on Fort Sumter."

But this is not all. We have spent almost $2,000,000,000 more than they have spent.

We have made 280,000 of our women widows.

We have made 1,000,000 of our children fatherless.

We have destroyed the constitution of country.

We have brought the ferocious savagery of war into every corner of society.

We have demoralised our pulpits, so that our very religion is a source of immorality and blood.

Instead of being servants of Christ our ministers are servants of Satan.

The land is full of contractors, thieves, provost marshals, and a thousand other tools of illegal and despotic power, as Egypt was of vermin in the days of Pharaoh.

We are rapidly degenerating in everything that exalts a nation.

Our civilization is perishing.

We are swiftly drifting into inevitable civil war here in the North.

We are turning our homes into charnal houses.

There is a corpse in every family.

The angel of death sits in every door.

The Devil has removed from Tartarus to Washington.

We pretend that we are punishing the rebels but they are punishing us.

We pretend that we are restoring the Union, but we are destroying it.

We pretend that we are enforcing the laws, but we are only catching negroes.

That is the way we are "revenging Sumter."

Selling our souls to the Devil and taking Lincoln and Co.'s promise to pay. We have it greenbacks and blood.

This is the way we are "revenging Sumter."—American Paper.

Terrible Tornado.

(From the Batavia Times.)

On Wednesday evening last, about half-past 9 o'clock, the village of Cary, in Genesee county was visited by a most destructive tornado. Coming from a westerly direction it struck the earth a few miles west of the village, and along its entire track, which was about three-quarters of a mile wide, a terrible scene of desolation and destruction was presented the following morning. The growing crops on the area over which it swept were entirely destroyed miles of fences buried and scattered over the country, large barns removed some distance from their foundations, and several farm houses riddled by the immense hailstones as though they had been the target for an army; every window exposed to its fury was completely demolished; chimneys and outbuildings offered but little resistance.

Reaching the village of Cary, the tempest seemed bent on destruction, scarcely a window facing the west but what was destroyed. In the seminary building over 500 panes of glass were demolished, and the rain, which poured in torrents at the time, flooded every room in which the storm king had forced an entrance; four large chimneys were here broken off by the roof; other prominent buildings in the village shared a like fate, and a more desolate scene we never looked upon. The fruit crop is entirely destroyed where the storm struck apples and pears beaten to a pomace by the blocks of hail, and the cherries and other fruit trees almost entirely stript of both leaves and fruit. As for garden stuff scarcely a vestage remains; vines, cabbage, corn—everything broken off and split to shreds. Immense trees, that had withstood the storms of a century, were prostrated, and everything yielded to the fell destroyer. Mr. McGuire is one of the principal sufferers, and his loss will not fall short of $1,000. Mr. Taylor is a loser to the extent of $600.

Newspaper Patronage.

This thing called newspaper patronage is a curious thing. It is composed of as many colors as the rainbow, and as changeable as the chameleon.

One man subscribes for a newspaper and pays for it in advance; he goes home and reads it with the proud satisfaction that it is his own. He hands in an advertisement, asks the price and pays for it. This is newspaper patronage.

Another man says, please to put my name on your list of subscribers; and he goes off without having said pay once. Time passes, your patience is exhausted, and you dun him. He flies in a passion, perhaps pays, and perhaps not.

Another man has been a subscriber a long time. He becomes tired of you and wants a change. Thinks he wants a city paper. Tells the postmaster to discontinue, and one of his papers is returned marked 'refused.' Pays up for it among the last of his thoughts; besides he wants his money to send to a city publisher.

After a time you look over his account and send a bill of 'balance due.' But does he pay for it freely and cheerfully? We leave him to answer. This, too, is newspaper patronage.

Another man lives near you—never took your papers—it is too small—don't like the editor—don't like the politics—too whiggish or too something else—yet goes regularly to his neighbor's and regards his by his fire—finds fault with its contents, disputes its positions, and quarrels with its type. Occasionally sees an article he likes—'sheds' half a dime or begs a number. This too is newspaper patronage.

Another sports a fine horse, or perhaps a pair of them is always seen with whip in hand or spur on foot—single man—no use for him to take a newspaper—knows enough. Finally he concludes to get married—does so—sends a notice of the fact with a 'please send me a half a dozen copies.' This done, does he ever pay for notice or papers? No. 'Surely you don't charge for such things!' This, too, is newspaper patronage.

Another man—bless you, it does us good to see such a man—comes and pays the year for which I paid is about to expire, and I want to pay for another. He does, and retires.

Reader: isn't newspaper patronage a curious thing? And in that great day when honest men get their reward due to their honesty, which think you, of these enumerated above, will obtain that reward? Now it will be seen that, while certain kinds of patronage are the very life and 'existence' of a newspaper, there are other kinds that kill a paper stone dead.

A Touching Scene.

Rev. Horace Bushnell, who is blind, a city missionary for twelve years in Cincinnati, in his last report relates the following:

Leaving the cemetery one day, and finding for the sides walk with my staff, a woman's voice inquired:

"Are you blind, sir?"

"Quite blind."

"Well, here's the sidewalk; but can you guess where you are?"

"Yes, at the corner of——and——streets."

"Well, you are good at guessing; but can you tell why God has deprived you, a holy man, of sight, and left me, a drunken sinner, with my eyes?"

"Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

"Yes, he may be your Father, but he is not mine."

"Have we not all one father? Hath not one God created us all?"

"One God created us, but I put pow on enemy and not a child."

"It may be so, yet through the blood of Jesus they who were sometimes alienated and enemies by wicked works, become reconciled to God."

"It may be you would be offended if I offered to lead you over this rough place?"

Now Simon, the Pharisee, said gently in my heart, if this man were of God, he would know what manner of woman this is that toucheth him, for she is a sinner; but the scene of Bethany was present, and I said, "I will not be offended; take my arm."

She did so, saying, "Thank God! thank God!"

"For what?"

"That I may guide the feet of one of his servants, for I am not fit to touch the hem of his garment. I had a brother once and he was a minister of God like you."

She was weeping. The hearse passed before us. She said, "You can't see that."

"No, what is it?"

"That is the paupers' carriage. Even we drunken paupers ride home in that when life ends."

"To what home?"

"The grave."

"Is the grave the sinner's home?"

"Would to God it were; then I could have hope of rest at last."

"Have you no hope?"

"No hope! Their worm dieth not and their fire is not quenched."

"But you should hope?"

"Why should I hope?"

"God is good!"

"But I have abused his goodness."

"God is merciful!"

"I have despised his mercy."

"But God is love!"

For a short time she was silent, and then resumed: "How can such a sinner as I have hope?"

"It is a faithful saying that Jesus Christ came to save sinners."

"But I am a great sinner."

"His blood cleanseth from all sin."

"I'm a lost sinner!"

"But he can save to the uttermost all that come

Antidote for Arsenic.

Mr. W. H. Hake, of Frost, Devon, dispenser of the Devonshire Galvanic Hydropathic Medicines," has sent us the following means of counteracting the poisonous effects of arsenic, and considering how often deaths happen by persons swallowing, either intentionally or accidentally, this poison, we think it right to recommend every one to copy the following, that they may be enabled to rescue their fellow-creatures from the most horrible of deaths in the hour of need. Mr. Hake then describes the process of administering the antidote, the:—"The only certain and safe antidote for arsenic is the hydrated peroxide of iron, which can readily be procured from any druggist. (The carbonate of iron of the shops may also be used for the purpose, as in the process of drying it leaves carbonic acid and absorbs oxygen, so that at least three-fourths of it are converted into peroxide.) As soon as it is discovered that any one has swallowed this poison, let there be administered to him a table-spoonful of this powder in some water, and in five or ten minutes after let another be given.—One or two teaspoonfuls will be sufficient for a child. The antidote is no sooner received into the stomach than an action between the iron and or ganic commences; the two substances unite together; a new compound is the result—viz: an arsenic of iron, and all the poisonous nature of the arsenic is at the same time destroyed."

Hon Joshua R. Giddings is at his home at Jefferson, Ashtabula county, suffering from quite poor health.

Municipality of Ashburnham.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees for the Village of Ashburnham, have required the Municipal Council of the said Village to raise the sum of Two Hundred Dollars for the purpose of building and furnishing a School House in the said Village; and whereas it is desirable and expedient that the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars be raised by Debentures, payable in five years; and whereas it will require that Debentures be issued for the sum of Sixteen Hundred Dollars to realise the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars, and to pay the interest, discount, and expenses connected therewith:

It is hereby enacted by the Municipal Council of the said Village of Ashburnham: That five Debentures be issued by the said Municipality, for the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars each: one of which shall be made payable on the First day of April in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868, and that the same be signed by the Reeve, and sealed with the Corporation Seal. And whereas, the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property of the said Village amounts, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, to the sum of Seven Thousand Five Hundred and Eighteen Dollars; and it will require that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be levied and collected in each year to pay the amount of the said Debentures:

It is hereby enacted, that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be raised, levied and collected on the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property in the said Village, over and above all other rates and assessments in the present year, 1863, and in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, to provide for the payments of the Debentures to be issued as hereinbefore mentioned.

And it is further enacted, that a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Friday the Seventh day of August next, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the Forenoon.

TAKE NOTICE,

That the above is a true copy of a proposed By-law which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality after one month from the first publication in the Peterborough Examiner, the date of which first publication was on Thursday, the Sixteenth day of July, 1863; and the votes of the Electors of the said Municipality will be taken thereon, at the Town Hall of the said Village, on Friday, the Seventh day of August, at the hour of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

First Annual Tour of the New Monster

EQUESCURRICULUM!

An establishment entirely Novel and Original in construction, Superior in every Speciality, and including the following

Immense and Unparalleled Combination:

I. TOM KING'S OLYMPIC CIRCUS, From Washington and Baltimore.

II. JOE PENTLAND'S CIRCUS, From the Academy of Music, Boston, and immediately from the Pacific Coast.

III. LENT'S NATIONAL CIRCUS, From Niblo's Garden, New York.

IV. Wallace's Troop of ACTING BEARS, From California.

V. Derr's Educated SACRED BULL, From Hindostan.

VI. Wonderful LEAPING BUFFALOES, From the Prairies of the Far West.

VII. Professor Langworthy's Corps of PERFORMING DOGS and MONKEYS From all parts of the world.

☞ COMPRISING SEVEN DISTINCT EXHIBITIONS, ☜

All under one GIGANTIC PAVILLION for ONE single PRICE of Admission
The whole under the immediate direction of

L. B. LENT - - - - - - Manager.

NOTICE.

It will be seen that the combination above given results in

AN ENTIRELY NEW CLASS OF AMUSEMENTS!

Such as has never before been attempted by private enterprise, and entails such an enormous expenditure of money, that only the most liberal patronage can render it remunerative. The Management will therefore be pardoned for directing attention to the fact that this Magnificent Phalanx of Exhibitions not only combines an infinitely greater degree of Novelty, Variety and Effect within itself than can be found in any other place of Amusement in the world, but also nearer approach to PERFECTION IN EVERY DETAIL. For instance, the Three Circuses include by far ☞ the most Talented Array of Equestrians, Vaulters, Athletæ, Jugglers, Acrobats, Posture Masters, etc., etc., ☜ to be found upon either side of the Atlantic, while the combined collection of HIGHLY TRAINED HORSES, PONIES and MULES, includes a larger number in the aggregate, and more beautiful and wonderfully trained individuals of each species, than can be found in any or all other Equestrian Exhibitions. In regard to the features peculiar to this establishment, of course there can be no room for comparison, and it can only be said that they will be found as pleasing and satisfactory as they are new and attractive. At each entertainment the TROUPE of ACTING BEARS will be introduced in the Arena in all their unprecedented performances; the EDUCATED SACRED BULL and the LEAPING BUFFALOES will exhibit their wonderful training; Professor Langworthy's Corps of PERFORMING MONKEYS, PONIES and DOGS will go through their astonishing and indescribably laughable feats, and all the principal Artists of the TRIPLE CIRCUS TROUPE will take part in an

UNPARALLELED DISPLAY OF HORSEMANSHIP AND ATHLETIC SKILL!

The veritable and inimitable JOE PENTLAND will officiate as Clown to the Equestrian Scenes. The public entree of the establishment, headed by the Gorgeous Band Chariot, containing CHAS. BOSCOLD'S OPERA BAND, will take place about 10 o'clock on the morning of the day of Exhibition.

Admission to the combined Exhibition, only 25 Cents. No Half Price; no charge for Reserved Seats. Doors open at 2 and 7. Performance to commence at 2½ and 7½ o'clock, P. M.

Will Exhibit at Peterboro', MONDAY, AUGUST 10th.

Manilla, August 7th; Lindsay, August 8th; Port Hope, August 11th; Cobourg, August 12th; Percy, August 13th.

Poetry.

ODE TO ORKNEY.

Land of whirlpool—torrent—foam,
Where oceans meet in madd'ning shock
The beetling cliff—the shelving holm—
The dark insidious rock:
Land of the bleak, the treeless moor—
The sterile mountain, seared and riven;
The shapele s cairn, the ruined tower
Scathed by the bolts of heaven:
The yawning gulf—the treacherous sand—
I love the still my native land.

Land of the dark—the Runic rhyme—
The mystic ring—the cavern hoar;
Th Scadinavian seer—sublime
In legendary lore:
Land of a thousand Sea-kings' graves,
—Those tameless spirits of the past,
Fierce as their subject Arctic waves,
Or hyperborean blast;
Tho' polar billows round the foam,
I love thee! Thou wert once my home.

With glowing heart, and island lyre,
Ah! would some native bard arise
To sing with all a poet's fire
Thy stern sublimities;
The roaring flood—the rushing stream,
The promontary wild and bare,
The pyramid where sea-birds scream
Aloft in middle Air;
The Druid temple on the heath
Old, even beyond tradition's breath.

Though I have roamed thro' verdant glades,
In cloudless climes, 'neath azure skies;
Or plucked from beauteous orient mends
Flowers of celestial dyes;
Though I have laved in limpid streams,
That murmur over golden sands;
Or basked amid the fulgid beams
That flame o'er fairer lands;
Or stretched me in the sparry grot,—
My country! Thou wer't ne'er forgot.

Miscellaneous.

THE BARONET OF BURRA.

A pit impervious to the light of heaven,
By savage hands scooped from the solid rock.
Where yet the beams of yonder blessed sun
Nee'r shed a solitary ray.

Such were many of those strongholds of misery which went by the appelation, in Scotland, of 'keeps,' 'donjons,' or 'pits,' the addition of which to their baronical castles was considered necessary, that their tyrant lords might feast their eyes with the writhings of their victims, and solace their ears with their groans. Poets and sentimentalists may effect to mourn over the ruin of the ill fated Charles-Edward, after Drummossie Muir had been soaked with the noblest blood in Scotland—they may deplore the inhuman butcheries, the unmanly decapitations, and the ruthless cruelties, which were practised alike on the noble and the serf, the hardy mountain warrier and the homeless female, even after victory had declared herself in the most unequivocal manner. Undoubtedly the perpetrators of these enormities will be held in infamy until time shall blend with eternity,— but all this spilt blood, all the devastation, and barbarities, and spoliations, which fell alike on the offender and the innocent, have been fraught with blessings to our country—to us—to posterity. The rising of the clans was the means of placing the copestone on our temple of liberty, the foundation of which was laid at the glorious revolution: inasmuch as that event induced the legislature, though at the 11th hour, to expunge from the statute-book that moral and legal abomination— heritable jurisdictions, or the entrusting with the liberty, property, and even the life of the subject, an imperious noble, who often knew no law but his own base impulses, and no morals but such as suited his own interest; who made even religion subservient to his aggrandisement, by teaching his creatures to promulgate and practise the wholesome doctrine of passive obedience and non-resistance. So deeply were the terrors of the great men engraven on the souls of his serfs, that the death of their nearest and dearest relatives was often preferred to the displeasure of the chief. Hence the conjugal exhortation of a certain matron, when her hapless helpmate had been taken from the 'pit' to the foot of the gallows. Donald, it seems, possessed the bump of self-preservation in prominent relief: and agreeably to the rules in these cases made and provided, he was 'unco sweer'—having an eye also to the sublime and beautiful—to shut his eyes for ever on the glorious highland scene around him. He thought also on ten or twelve bare-legged Macs, doomed hereafter to swell the tail of their father's murder, and a tear, for the first time, rolled down his furrowed cheek. 'Eye, fye, Donald, my bonny man,' cried his about-to-be bereaved spouse; gae awa' up an' hangit, like a shentleman, an' please the laird.'

A chieftain of this school lived, or rather reigned, in the Island of Burra in Orkney, some time subsequent to "the fifteen." Haughty in his disposition, and imperious in his bearing, even to his equals; domineering and despotical over those helpless wretches who had the misfortune to live under his protection; combining the revenge of a Shylock with the taciturnity of a mute, especially when it chanced to suit his interest to do so, Sir John Staurt lorded it over his vassals with a despotism worthy of the meridian of Algiers. He was a descendant of Robert Stuart, first Earl of that name, who was himself an illegitimate son of James the Fifth, by the famous Euphemia Elphingstone; and hence his jacobitism was equal to the haughtiness of his nature and pride of birth. He intrigued for the Court of St. Germains with all the address of an adept; and endeavoured, whenever he could do so with impunity, to thwart the schemes of the reigning family, as well as to wreak his vengeance in every possible way on the aristocracy of the country who adhered to their interests. One of his retainers, being at the Kirkwall fair, chanced to fall in with a recruiting party. The usual "speeches," and the usual libations flowed in on the poor youth with such effect, that, ere another sun had gilded the horizon, he found, to his horror, that he had mounted the black cockade, an emblem he had been taught from infancy to regard as worse than the private mark of his infernal majesty. With returning reason, therefore, and watching the first opportunity, the young recruit tore the hated badge from his bonnet, and sought and obtained his lord's protection. A substern and a file of men ransacked the island of Burra, but Sir James was prepared for them; and the baulked 'Hanoverians' returned to headquarters humbled and jaded, whilst the jacobite partizan bestowed a smile of bitter scorn on them and their employers.

This was not to be borne. The officer of the party claimed the assistance of the civic authorities, and sported some of the choicest execrations which he had learned under the walls of Malplaquet. But the provost was a man of peace, and, moreover, knew too well the nature of the infuriated baronet, to beard him in his own island. He, therefore, waited until he learnt that Sir James had gone on a shooting excursion; and seizing the first opportunity, he took a boat and four men and pulled to that island, under pretence of a friendly visit to its proprietor.

It so happened, that the first person they met was the individual they were in search of,—namely, the deserter. To pinion him and place him in the boat was the work of a moment; and in five minutes more the civic dignitary was pulling away in triumph to the opposite shore of Holm, resolving internally to have his laugh also at Maribo-rough. But he had reckoned without his host. An advice current had set in Holmsound, which retarded the boat's progress; and Sir James was a very Argus. In half an hour the baronet's boat was seen turning a headland, its crew straining every nerve, and visibly gaining ground. The provost's post grazed the beach; and with all the rapidity that council dinners had left him, he was endeavoring to spring on shore. Sir James, seeing that he was likely to loose not only his retainer, but what was far dearer to him—his revenge, suddenly seized his fowling-piece, and lodged its contents in the civic dignitary's seat of honour. Fortunately, however, the distance was so great, that the sluge.

Just played dril through the skin,
An' did nae mair.

During the confusion the recruit plunged into the water, and was taken on board by his fellow-serfs; while Sir James, with the halcyon feelings of an approving conscience, went home to dinner. How the provost felt on this occasion, tradition saith not.

But the more tragical part of the baronet's story yet remains to be told. Of the very few families with which Sir James interchanged civilities, that of Melsetter, situated on the beautiful island of Walls, was one. The lady of this mansion was a distant relation of his own; an thither he and his brother Archibald would repair, to partake of the sports of the muirs—the island abounding with grouse and a variety of other game. The proprietor of the fine estate was a distinguished naval officer; had performed a serious of brilliant exploits, both on the coast of Spain and in the West Indies; and had very recently returned to enjoy himself in the bosom of his family. Captain M——— having perceived that shoals of strangers were constantly traversing his estates in quest of game, gave rigid orders, to both servants and tenants, to take by force all fowling-pieces from such as had not his written permission to use them. The haughty aristocrat, and his equally haughty brother, never dreamt that the order applied to them, and accordingly pursued their sport when it suited their convenience. One unfortunate day, however, when the brothers were birding on the confines of Hoy, certain of Captain M.'s servats came in contact with them, and demanded their fowling pieces. How two such resolute men surrendered their pieces was a mystery; but certain it is that the servants brought them in triumph to the mansion-house, and delivered them to their master.

When the Captain learned to whom the arms belonged, he was quite confounded; and well knowing the implacable disposition of his lady's relatives, he dispatched a boat to the island of Burra with the fowling-pieces, and with a sealed letter, containing the most ample apology, and inviting them on all occasions, when they so pleased, to use every liberty on his estate, assuring them that their doing so would be an high compliment. No apology, however, could be listened to by the exasperated brothers; nor were the intercessions of mutual friends at all available for what they conceived to be a mortal affront; and the country rang from one end to the other with their threats of vengeance.

The winter now approached, and Captain M. with his family retired to their town-house in Kirkwall. Thither also repaired the enraged brothers, burning with revenge, and making no secret of their hostile inclinations. Lady M., well aware of the implacable disposition of her kinsmen, prevailed on her husband to keep the house after night-fall. To indulge his wife, whose health at that time was rather delicate, he reluctantly consented and for several weeks within doors especially after twilight. But weary of restraint, and considering it dishonorable to his profession, he, at the request of two pretended friends, who, it afterwards appeared, had leagued with the two Stuarts, walked forth one evening, unknown to his lady. He had not been a moment before his own gate, when a bullet whizzed past him and struck the wall. A hoarse voice was immediately heard from the church-yard opposite, exclaiming, 'Fire again! the Hanoverian dog still stands.' Instantly another explosion was heard, and the gallant Captain M. was stretched in the dust mortally wounded.

The dastardly assasins took themselves to their horses, which were ready saddled; galloped with the utmost rapidity to one of the numerous bays which indent the island of Hoxsona; embarked on board of a vessel which had been in readiness for the occasion, and arrived safely in London, where by the influence and intercession of certain masqued jacobites, then in power, they procured a pardon.

Whilst Lady M., in the depth of her affliction, was bewailing her violent and untimely bereavement, her eldest son, a fine boy about ten years of age, pointing to his father's sword, declared, that if ever he lived to be a man, with that weapon he would sever the murderer's head from his body:—and faithfully he kept his word, if not to the letter, at least to a more honourable equivalent.

Many years afterwards, it was discovered that Sir James had been in treasonable correspondence with the Pretender: and after the battle of Culloden his intrigues and letters were brought to light. Troops were immediately ordered down to the Orkney islands to seize on the persons of the rebels, and lay waste their estates; and the cloud which twenty years previous had been no bigger than a man's head, now came.

"Thickening and blackening.
O'er his devoted head!"

Young Captain M., who had already distinguished himself in the service of the reigning family, petitioned for, and readily obtained, the command of the transport fleet, who crowded every inch of canvass for the scene of their destruction. The fleet proceeded to Kirkwall; but M——, with a chosen band, left them off the island of Copinsha, and secretly landed on the south side of Burra.

Sir James had that day been out fowling, and seeing the red-coats defiling by an unfrequented path to his mansion, instantly suspecting the cause, and immediately endeavoured to gain his own house, where he might have kept the party in play, until stratagem or succour might have assisted him; but M. sprung from his party like an arrow, and seized the trembling tyrant within an hundred yards of his own threshold. The hoary assasin, on his knees, implored M. to allow him to take leave of his wife and family; but M. sternly replied, 'such time as you allowed my brave father to prepare for eternity, like time you shall have now;" at the same time he was hurried into the boat, which proceeded with alacrity to Kirkwall. The humbled despot was sent in manacles to Edinburgh Castle, where he was tried and condemned; but during the night previous to his execution, he swallowed poison and perished. Such was the unhappy end of one, who, had he had an opportunity, would have waded

Through slaughter to a throne,
And shut the gates of mercy on mankind.

A Border Tale.

At a time when the Border Counties were infested with a lawless banditti of rapacious desperadoes, travelling, especially night travelling, was rendered extremely dangerous; and he was considered a bold and adventurous individual who could undertake a journey in those troubled times after the fall of night. At this period a Border Youth, who

"Ply'd the oar across the ferry."

at Ormiston Mains, in the county of Roxburg, was a short December day, despatched to Kelso, the district market town, to purchase provisions, and several other articles for domestic use. After transacting his business, which detained him rather long in town, he again took the road, and beat his way homewards; but had not proceeded far on his journey,

"When the clouds of night, with darkness came Then all around was gloom."

A dense mist sat down on the earth, and in a short time all was still; not a sound was heard save the distant murmuring of the Tweed, as it rippled o'er its pebbled bed, and the occasional screech of the owl, as it hovered over head, towards the dilapidated battlements of Roxburg Castle; sounds which struck terror into the boatman's heart; and, as was natural for a youth of his tender years, stirred up in his mind fearful thoughts of the robbers, and their deeds of daring. Being alone, benighted, and several miles from home, through which he had to pass through a district of the country where the banditti were supposed to lurk, he became greatly alarmed for his personal safety; and lest he should attract their attention, he wended his way with the noiselessness of a shadow; but, on arriving at a lonely and secluded part of the road, where a young man who was travelling betwixt Kelso and Jedburg, had been brutally attacked by the banditti, and robbed of his little all, a low rustling noise was heard, and before he could turn round to ascertain the cause, a shot was fired which slightly grazed his side, from which blood flowed in copious streams, and trickled down his leg. Uttering a wild and terrific shriek, which was reverberated by the surrounding woods of that solitary district, with fearful effect he took flight, and ran with the celerity of the hart, when hotly pursued by the hunter, until he came to a cottage by the way side, into which he unceremoniously rushed, and fell down in a state of exhaustion on the floor. The prostrate boatman was speedily surrounded by the surprised domestics, inquiring the matter, which he briefly related in low and faltering accents. After somewhat recovering from his paroxism of fear, he rose from his recumbent position, with the assistance of the domestics, and was conducted to a chair, where he began to examine his wound; but, to his inconceivable astonishment and delight, he discovered that the cause of his alarm had been produced, not by a shot fired by the banditti, as he had believed, but being smartly struck on the side with a cork, which had struck with a loud report out of a barm bottle, which he carried in the outside pocket of his coat; the barm flowing from the bottle down his leg, not unaptly representing the blood flowing from his supposed wound. This discovery, as may be imagined, occasioned a good deal of merriment amongst the domestics, who freely gave vent to their feelings in loud and unrestrained bursts of laughter.

The Philosophy of Bathing.

The following is from Dr. Mayo G. Smith on the subject, and is worthy of consideration:

There are in the human body 2,700,000 glands and 7,009,000 pores, from 2000 to 3000 to the square inch, and one-eighth of an inch in depth, making twenty-eight miles of human drainage.

Five-eighths of all that is eaten passes off through the pores, and but one per cent of perspirable matter consists of solid substances. The change in the muscels, tissues and bones, occurs in from one to 3 years, and in the entire body in from six to seven years. If this old matter be retained, it causes disease—it is real virus.

Some diseases are removed almost instantly by opening the pores. Diarrhœa is frequently cured. Matter from the mucous membrane is expelled through the skin; tobacco, opium and mercury have thus been exuded. Whatever through the skin the body can expel, it can also absorb. Hold the end of your finger in the sparits of turpentine, it is absorbed: pass through the system, and may be detected by its odor. Constant handling of arsenic has produced death by absorption.

Dr. Brock, a student of Sir Astley Cooper, once poisoned a dog, which immediately plunged into the neighboring river, and remained for some time almost entirely submerged, after which he emerged from his watery hospital and ran home cured. Dogs have been repeatedly cured of hydrophobia by bolding them in water.

Thirst has often been relieved by immersion, even in salt water, the salt, probably, being excluded during the process of transudation.—Mutton bones, boiled a long time in soft water with a slight addition of calcinated potash, made fresh every day, have imparted to water such nourishing properties, that a patient bathing therein daily, and taking nothing save a few teaspoonfuls of tea twice a day, and one table-spoonful of tonic syrup, gained 16½ pounds in as many weeks, simply by absorption.

Perspiration is eliminated from all parts of the body, and the excretions, cutaneously formed, may, from some parts of the surface, be readmitted to the circulation, and if poisonous or injurious, whenever the blood visits it, it must carry disease. Nature keeps her side of the interior clean and soft, and demands an unobstructed interior, and exudes to the surface the refuse matter for removal by bathing and evaporation. A dry, light powder-like dust, mixed with sweat oil from the glands clogs in the pores. As all parts of the cuticle have pores, as well as the face and hands, all the body should be bathed at least one third as many times as these are.

On board a slave ship the small pox suddenly broke out. Medical aid was powerless.—Every morning the dead in great numbers were thrown overboard. In the midst of terror the negroes cried out, "Let us do as we do in our own country, with the sick!" and permission being given, they gently lowered their sick companions into the sea, letting them remain a few minutes, and then raised them and placed them on deck in the sunlight until dried; they repeated this process several times when the disease left them and they were cured.

At Charleston, S. C., among several Northern mechanics who had gone thither in company, but one escaped the prevailing fever, and he alone bathed frequently, and never slept in any of the clothes worn by day. The others only cast off their outer garments, slept in their perspiration and died.

Cold water is used and prescribed much more than formerly, though many would think a physician not worth sending for who would prescribe so simple a remedy: Abernethy's advice to one of his wealthy patients was. "Let your servant bring to you two or three pailfuls of water, and put it in a wash-tub; take off your clothes, get into it, and from head to foot, rub yourself with it, and you'll recover." "This advice of yours seems very much like telling me to wash myself," said the patient. "Well," said Abernethy, "it is open to that objection."

Boil Your Peas.

Uncle Joe is a queer old man, and 'Uncle Joe' to half the village. The boys all liked him. Many a joke do they crack together, and many a capital piece of good advice do they get from him without knowing it. Boys are not fond of good advice, but they take it from Uncle Joe, smack their lips, and ask for more. 'Uncle Joe is so droll,' they say.

'Boys,' said he, one day, to a parcel of them gathered round, 'boys, did you ever hear about the two men who made a pilgrimage to Loretto?'

No, they hadn't, but wanted to.

'Well, the priest told them, in order to reap the most good from their pilgrimage, they must put peas in their shoes. So they did, and set out, and went and came home again. One looked as bright and cheerful as when he set out, and said he got along first-rate.'

'Ah,' cried the other, with a long face, 'I've had a hard time and no mistake. Those terrible peas almost killed me; they hurt my feet, strained my cords, blistered my skin, and it is hard to say when I shall get over it; a most miserable time I had of it. How is it you came home looking as comfortable as if you rode in a carriage all the way?'

"Oh," said the other, 'I had no difficulty with them at all; I boiled my peas."

'Good!' shouted the boys, laughing, 'good!'

'Yes,' chuckled Uncle Joe, 'yes: sensible fellow, to my thinking. Now, boys, when your lessons are hard, or your work is hard or your masters are hard, and everything seems to strain and blister you why 'boil your peas.' There is always some simple way to soften down difficulties and ease the ruggedness of the road you have to travel.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6TH, 1863.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

On Thursday next, the assembled wisdom of the land will meet at Quebec. The relative strength of the two parties will be immediately tested by the election of Speaker. We believe there is not much doubt existing in the minds of any but that the Government nominee, whoever he may be, will be elected, and that by a large majority. We say large majority because we believe that there are many who, although their views do not precisely coincide with those of the Ministerial party, are still willing to give the Ministry a fair and impartial trial. Realising that the lines of past demarkation have become almost obliterated in the many political changes that have transpired during the past few years, these consider it a duty they owe to their constituents to give the Ministry an opportunity, by its proper administration of affairs, to win and keep the confidence of the country. Any other conduct on the part of members must be manifestly unfair. But however unfair it may be, there are not a few members who have pre-determined to offer the most determined and deadly opposition to the Ministry. They have made up their minds that the Ministry must be ousted; why? simply that they themselves may once more handle the reins of government. Under present circumstances which render it literally almost impossible for the Opposition to accomplish this end, their conduct cannot be otherwise than stigmatised as factious. We know perfectly well that the Opposition hate the word 'factious," and have been laboring hard to prove they are not factious, but we fear with but little success. We think that the interests of the country demand that party lines and distinctions should be laid aside; and all go to work harmoniously and vigorously in originating and perfecting such measures as at the present juncture of affairs appear imperatively necessary.

MEXICO.

The Mexican republic, of which at its birth some forty years ago, such a bright and prosperous future was presaged and anticipated by the ardent friends of liberty, is now numbered among the things of the past. Royalty will again rule in the walls of the Montezumas. Ex[illegible] patriotism, intestine convulsions, flagrant corruption, and priestly influence, have done their work. All opposition to the French arms has proved unavailing. Upon the ruins of Mexican republic, destroyed by the treachery and cowardice of its own sons, has risen an Empire. The Council of notables, composed of creatures known to be entirely subservient to French interests, has invited Maximilian of Austria to become the first emperor. In case of his refusal, Napoleon has been begged to take the appointment in his own hands. Napoleon is astute, and knows well how to profit by the advantages afforded by his late success. Whoever may be the ostensible ruler, Napoleon will be the real ruler. Napoleon will be the sovereign; the other, the puppet. Under these circumstances it is hardly likely that Maximilian will be induced to accept a crown, the tenure of which is dependant upon the whims and caprice of one who has proved anything but a friend to his family. In case of his refusal, which is more than probable, the appointment reverts to Napoleon, who, no doubt, in accordance with the Napoleonic policy of family aggrandisement, will take care that so valuable an opportunity of accomplishing this important end is not overlooked or thrown away. At the same time, his offer of the crown to Maximilian is not without its object. It is an attempt to reconcile the inconsistency of his professions at the outset of the war with his late and present conduct. Then he disclaimed all intentions of conquest, or in any way of interfering with the internal polity of the republic; now he wishes to make the world believe that he is still disinterested so far as personal ends are concerned, and that the change in form of government that has taken place is not his work but that of the Mexican people themselves. To give color to this, as legal authorities phrase it, the Council of notables, which has for the present been permitted to subvert the Constitution, and to arrogate to itself unlimited powers, has been instigated by French influence to invite one altogether disconnected with the French nation to assume the sceptre. It requires no great prevision to to realise the result of this tortuous policy. As before stated it is more likely this invitation will be rejected; the next step will be the designation of a scion of the present French dynasty to the vacant throne—in all probability Prince Napoleon, whose scheme of getting a crown during the late Italian convulsion was so cleverly checkmated and defeated by the shrewd and far seeing Cavour. Mexico will, henceforth, then, be a mere appanage of the French Crown. France has long wanted such a place for the expenditure of its surplus energies and population. Algeria has been its only outlet for years; but it is comparatively limited, and has likewise, from other circumstances, proved altogether insufficient for the purpose. But with Mexico it is far different; of immense territory, with fertile soil, rich mines, and a most salubrious climate, Mexico presents a theatre for the display of [illegible] energies that have been [illegible] On the whole, the [illegible] cannot be said [illegible] when Mexico fell. A mere bantling in point of years, it had already become decrepit, and ere long must have fallen through its own weakness and decay. Indeed, Mexico ever since its declaration of Independance in 1821, has been peculiarly an unfortunate country. It has known no permanent and settled government for any length of time. Intrigue, cabal and venality have been the characteristics of its rulers. Revolution after revolution convulsed the nation and expended the energies of the people, until at last the whole country became so restless under by intervocine factions as to be entirely unable to maintain its own internal order and security much less to meet successfully the victorious legions of the gallic Cæsar. No one of intelligence can harbor doubt, but that Mexico will be immensely strengthened and benefitted by the recent revolution. The Mexicans by their flagrant misrule have clearly demonstrated their total unfitness for self government. Their constitutional tendencies and characteristics no less physically than morally and intellectually considered, and the increasingly unsettled and distracted condition of the country were every day rendering them more and more disqualified for it. With them, republicanism was a splendid experiment; with them, as with most other nations that have tried it, it has turned out a splendid failure. The Mexicans were altogether deficient in the essentially necessary to insure a republics bare existence to say nothing of its coherence, stability and longevity. Like the French people, they require a clear intellect and a strong hand over them. And in Napoleon the will have both, a clear intellect to direct and a strong hand to execute. We may therefore reasonably expect to see Mexico rapidly rising from one of the most feeble and insignificant of American countries, to be one of the first upon the Continent, for it possesses within itself all the elements of a powerful and prosperous nation. What in reality may be the ulterior influences of the Napoleonic policy when fully developed, on the rest of America, no one without the veriest presumption can venture to predicate. Nevertheless the most singular, and in not a few instances the most chimerically absurd and preposterous speculations have been indulged by professional theorists, whose heated and over strained imaginations are only too apt to mistake wild fancies for tangibilities, and forebodings for realities.

It is declared that Napoleon has an eye upon the States, and is only waiting an opportunity to swallow up the whole of Canada. The thing is ridiculous. The French ruler may be ambitious, inordinately so, and may be stretching out his feelers in all directions to see what he may grab, but he is a man likewise of good common sense and strong judgment, and is not likely therefore, Mr Baxters predictions to the contrary notwithstanding, to be so fool hardy as to provoke a contest that would shatter into fragments his dynasty, and cost him as dear as it did his uncle the great Napoleon. Judging from the past, however, it may safely be inferred and affirmed that the Northern States are as much displeased with the success of the French, as the Southern Confederacy is elated. It is indeed said, that the latter has already proposals of the most advantageous character to Napoleon, their basis being his recognition of their independence; but it is hardly probable that he will take this step alone, so long as the Northern States make no outward demonstrations against him, or interfere with his plans. That the Northern Government is not likely to do, with its hands as they are at present. But the Munroe doctrine which has been again and again affirmed by the highest authorities to be the only true guiding policy of the United States, by this machination of the government has received a blow which must rankle and leave a sting behind. Were the United States what they were some three or four years ago, they would never have allowed Napoleon to act as he has done. They cannot afford to quarrel with him now; but when the existent difficulties are satisfactorily settled, if they ever are, very little would be enough to kindle a war between the American and French governments. We think that by this time the American people ought to be able to realize which of the two, the much lauded France, or the greatly abused Britain has proved itself their best friend.

UNION SCHOOL.

We draw attention to the advertisement of the opening of the Grammar and Union School, in another column. Parents, if at all possible should make it a point to send their children at the commencement of the term. This institution is now in a highly prosperous condition, and we are assured by those who ought to know, that it has increased more than 50 per cent, both in fees and pupils during the last two years—a period during which the population of the Town to say the best for it has been stationery. No better evidence of its prosperity than this in our opinion could be advanced.

JOHN BAILEY, Lot 22 in the 3rd Concession of the Township of Emily, had his Barns, sheds, and contents destroyed by Lightning on Sunday evening last; his loss is not less than $1,600, about $600 Insurance in the C. W. F. M. and S. Insurance Company of Hamilton; this ought to be a warning to those that are not already insured, every farmer can be insured in a most respectable Company for one per cent. For three years several claims have already been paid by their agent, J. R. Walker, in the most prompt and liberal manner, and we have no doubt this claim will also be paid promptly among the rest.

MADAGASCAR.

Almost every one is familiar with the name of Madagascar. It is a large island lying on the eastern coast of Africa, from which it is separated by the channel of Mozambique. It is about 1100 miles long [illegible] 000 in breadth, the population somewhere about 3,000,000. The interior is mountainous; but this, on the whole, highly fertile and produces tropical fruits in the greatest abundance. It also abounds in valuable mines. The inhabitants are a peculiar people. They have made considerable progress in civilization. Many of them have become converts to Christianity, but the majority are yet heathens. The first great strides of progress were made some forty years ago, when Radama I., was King. Radama was the first King who wielded sovereign power in the Island. He formed a train of artillery and armed his soldiers with muskets. This enabled him to reduce to subjection most of the island. He was liberal in his policy and comprehensive in his views. He aided the missionaries, established a printing press, and sent a number of young natives to London and Paris to be educated as teachers. The most sanguine anticipations were entertained of the future by the Christian world. The most glowing accounts were sent by the missionaries of their success. But things soon changed. Radama was poisoned in 1828 by his Queen, who immediately raised her paramour to the throne. A system of persecution against the church was commenced, and relentlessly followed up. But after a while, by the interference of foreign powers, the persecution ceased, and Christians, though deprived of places of trust, were permitted to live unmolested, at least openly. On the accession of the late King, Radama II., the hopes of the Christians revived, as he was known to be favorably disposed towards them. But Radama proved himself an unwise and unpolitic ruler. During the last 30 or 40 years the leaders of the people, through the intercourse of strangers, have made no inconsiderable progress in civilization and have acquired no mean ideas of constitutional rights and of the privileges which Sovereign and people should severally possess. The conduct of the King elected was much disapproved. Within a short time before his death, great efforts had been made to get him under the debasing superstitions of the country. The efforts were only too successful. He contracted a great hatred to the Christians. An epidemic about this time broke out. The Christians were considered the cause. It was proposed to assassinate a number of those to put an end to the sickness. Radama announced his intention of issuing a law that any person or persons wishing to fight with arms, swords, or spears, should not be prevented; and if any one were killed, the murderer should go unpunished. The object of this was only too apparent. It alarmed the whole community. The ministers of the King remonstrated with him against issuing so infamous a decree. But he was obstinate. After some further debate the ministers withdrew. On the evening of the same day the King was put to death by his advisers. Next day the Queen was invested with the sovereignty on certain conditions among which are the following:

"The word of the Sovereign alone is not to be law, but the nobles and heads of the people, with the Sovereign, are to make the laws.

"Perfect liberty and protection are guaranteed to all foreigners who are obedient to the laws of the country.

"Friendly relations are to be maintained with all other nations.

"Duties are to be levied, but commerce and civilization are to be encouraged.

"Protection and liberty to worship, teach and promote the extension of Christianity are secured to the native Christians, and the same protection and liberty are guaranteed to those who are not Christians.

"Domestic slavery is not abolished; but masters are at liberty to give freedom to their slaves, or to sell them to others.

"No person as to put to death for any offence by the word of the Sovereign alone; and no one is to be sentenced to death till twelve men have declared such persons to be guilty of the crime to which the law awards the punishment of death."

What the future of the Island will be it is impossible to say. There seems to be a great rivalry between the French and English interests in the Island. The French blamed English influence for the Kings death, but without any show of reason. Radama perished because he was obstinate, and over confident in his own power; and because he was evidently wanting in his duties as a sovereign. Otherwise the revolution would not have been a bloodless one and so easily accomplished.

MADAM ANNA BISHOP.—The Concert of last evening in the new hall, was a perfect success of Madam Bishop;—she requires no elogiums from our pen. Her associate Artists are all that could be required or asked. Madam Bishop has been prevailed upon to remain another evening, on this occasion she and Mr. Seguin will appear in opera, perform the beautiful Operetta of Jeannett's Wedding entire.

THE American Agriculturist for August is received, it is an excellent number for general information to the farmer, or in fact any person who may have a garden; Subscriptions should be sent to the Proprietor, Orange Judd, 41 Park Row, New York City, immediately, to secure the Strawbery premium; price only one dollar a year.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—S. D's poetry is rejected for the want of the composers name; Don Ceasar's lines are also rejected for the want of the name accompanying it; A communication from Wm. C. Nicholls, is too long for insertion.

By an extra from the Canadian Post Printing office, at Lindsay, we notice that the busines will be carried on in future by Mr. George Cruickshank, formerly of the firm of Cruikshank & Co.

A QUEER FISH.

On the afternoon of Friday last, as we were sitting in our sanctum, with legs extended on the corner of our desk, a la Yankee fashion, and trying as we best could to snuff a breath of cool air out of the scorching heat of these intolerable dog days, in walked, sans ceremonee, a stalwarth specimen of the genus homo. His exterior appearance indicated, at a glance, that he had newly arrived from the old country—he being rigged out in a suit of courdroy pants, his vest and jacket being of material known as moleskin or fustin. His feet were encased in a pair of shoes, with soles at least an inch thick, and garnished, no doubt, on the underside with rows of large headed nails or tackets. On his cranium was one of the largest specimens of Kilmarnock bonnets, which he kept firmly upon his head, notwithstanding his entrance into our august presence. In his hand he held and firmly grasped a large sized cudgel or walking stick, evidently culled from some whin or thorn hedge in the spot of his birth. This lengthy description of our "customer" we took at the first glance—before he had yet opened his mouth.

We confess to having felt a little anxiety in regard to our own person, and more particularly so when the fellow inquired from us in a stern voice, if we were the "editar" of the Examiner newspaper. We acquiesced to this interrogation with a slight nod of the head, and inquired what his business with us might be.

"I want you," says he, "tae pit my Kisin's Orcadian Sketches intill your paiper right off."

"And who are you, and whom may your 'Kisin,' as you call him, be, and where are the Sketches you mention?" we inquired.

"Stop man! stop! dinna ask sae many questions at ance," said our visitor. "You want tae ken wha I am, div ye? Well, sir, that's a fair question, an easily answered. I am Mansi Laird, frae o' toon o' Wick, in o' county o' Caithness, Scotland, North Britain. Div ye want ony mair particulars?"

"Well, Mr. Laird, since that is your name, may we ask where are the Sketches you had reference to, and if they are suitable for our columns perhaps we may admit a few of them therein."

"No perhaps aboot it," thundered out our stalwarth visitor, with an energy that made us start from our chair, "they must and shall appear in your next issue, or this stick, and somebodys' hide will, nae doubt, come in contack. That's just what that lang-legged chiel' that conducts the Globe paiper in Toronto tauld me—Geordie Brown, I think, they ca' him. I show'd him my Kisin's Skitches, and he tauld me that perhaps they wid come out in his paiper when he had time till look o'er them. Wi' that I shook ma stick at him, and tauld him that I wid hae nae perhaps aboot it."

"And what did Mr. Brown say to that," we inquired.

"Say," responded our herculian Scot; "why, afore, I had the words out o' ma mooth, twa black looking printer deevils kicked me doun stairs, and then threw ma Kisin's Skitches after me—confoond the blaguards."

We confess to have felt inclined to act in the same manner towards the fellow as the Globe office printers' did; but being alone in our sanctum—our young men having gone to tea—we deemed "discretion the better part of valour." We, therefore, obtained the Sketches in question, and promised to print such of them as would suit us. With that the intruder left, whistling some Scotch tune, and promising to call again.

We give one of the "Orcadian Sketches," in our front page of to-day's issue, and leave our readers to judge of its merits.

The poetical "Ode to Orkney" we consider equal to anything that Campbell ever wrote, and a credit to Mr. Laird's Kisin.

So far, we think Mr. Mansie Laird has no occasion to be ashamed of his Cousin's productions. However, the public are the best judges; and if we find they "take"—the Sketches—we shall continue to issue them weekly—notwithstanding the threat of coming in contact with Mansies' cudgel if we don't.

TWELFTH OF JULY CELEBRATION IN BELFAST.—The Northern Whig says: In this Town, on the 13th, some excitement was caused by car loads of Orangemen passing through the streets on their way to Lisburn, where a monster meeting of from 15,000 to 18,000 Orangemen was held. In Sandy-row and Durham-street, the Orange district, large numbers were collected till a late hour last night, but no disturbance took place. An invasion was expected to have been made on the Roman Catholic district, and therefore an army of opposition stood prepared to receive any attack which might be made. Between 7 and 8 o'clock a few stones were thrown and windows smashed. About 10 o'clock Mr. Lyons, J.P., was passing through the disturbed district for the purpose of clearing the streets, when some person threw a large stone at him, which struck him on the back of the head, inflicting a very severe wound, from which blood flowed profusely. No arrest was made. From a very early hour the Orangemen for miles around continued to pour into Lisburn on cars. The different lodges from Belfast, Holywood, and the country districts around Lisburn, brought their lifes and drums, flags and sashes, to a field near Clogher, where a monster meeting took place. At one time about 30 flags floated in the hands of the bearers. No breach of peace took place, and everything passed off quietly.

FORT WAGNER—Fort Wagner is an irregular bastioned work, situated on the northern end of Morris Island, two thousand five hundred yards distant from Fort Sumter. it is composed entirely of sand, which, beyond doubt, is the best material to withstand the effect of a shell. Its ornament is nine guns; three gund have recently been mounted on the sea face to annoy the monitors. On the Southern face of the work all the obstructions that engineering skill can devise have been placed so as to annoy our troops in case of an assault. On the northern side of the work there has been erected a musketry which not only commands the approach from the northward, but enables its garrison to be sheltered in the event of our troops gaining an admittance to the interior. It has its ravelins, galleries and covered ways, and upon the whole is a very formidable work. The magazine is situated in the southern centre of the seaward portion of the work, and although exposed to the fire of our ironclads, it is so well built as to defy the projectiles which have already struck it.

LANTY MULLINS' LETTERS

TORONTO, PARK LANE—THAT WAS—
August 1st, 1863.

To Paddy Mahony, Ould Denny's Son, Petherboro, Kinrade's West:

Begorra, Paddy allanah, I'm gettin on finely since I kem up here; havin made the acquaintance of one Sandy Mac Intire, a servant of the Hon. George Brown, among all the rest of my new frinds. Although a dacent fella, sorra a lithier name iver belonged to man, for he is muck intire from head to toe, however he stands it, or those about him. Still he is useful to me in a sartin way, so as that I put up wid a little excenthricity of the kind, by way of puttin myself in the road of a little information now and then, although I don't like the snuff.

Well, will you bleeve me whin I tell you that as great a man as his masther is against the papists, he goes to confession as regular as the sun, and takes an odd taste wid the Bishop here—who is a very fine man, an I from some place about Tuam, I bleeve. Be this as it may; these two worthies have many a jorial night together, and will you credit the fact, when you hear it?—they seldom sit down without havin Edgerton Ryerson, the great schoolman among them. Whin they were all saited together the other night, and purty well, I thank you, the Bishop says over to George:

"Well, the Church, the Press, and the Educational intherests of the counthry are in good hands at laste, so fill up boys, and here's success to thee."

No sooner said nor done; so, when George made a spy-glass of the tumbler he had in his fist, up he gets on his legs and sez, wid a slight tendency to hiccup:

"Gintlemin, or rather my lord and you my frind"—that was over to Edgerton, there bein but the three of t'im—"the Press is a powerful ingin; and more particularly so since the ould rammago one has been sint to pot, and the double sillandher dhrivin by steam, put in its place. You can now, thanks to this moddern improvemint, let slide thirty or forty yards a minnit of any kind of rubbish you want to stick on the public; and if other improvements are introduced corresponding wid what I have just stated, there is no knowin what we may be able to turn out if the reverend Mr. Baxter does'nt cut us short wid his prophecies, and do us all un within the next siven years. The Lather I bleeve has got a double sillandher as well as myself; but I have it, wid confidence, to the Province as to which of us turns out the best article. Indeed, if I took a lafe out of the book of that essayist durin the last election, and wrote pondherous articles that the workin people had no time to read, Mr. Smith and Mr. McDonell would now be far enough from bein the representatives of this city. A succession of compact paragraphs are the right sort of shot for times of commosling; and if a man doesn't care as to the precise material of which they're composed, so much the better. Let the public look out for themselves."

The Bishop who was losin himself a little observed at this point that he supposed that that was one of the "casual advantages of the Press."

In less than a second, Edgerton pricked up his ears and says to the prelate:

"And what are your lordships casual advantages and haven't you and your cloth for cinturies upon cinturies been feedin upon"——

"Hush!" says George; "here's Ogle R., I hear his voice in the hall, and there's no use in raisin disturbance for the amusement of ivery Orange Lodge in the counthry."

On this, down they all sat agin; for the joker he spoke of soon appeared, took his seat, and was hob a nobbin among them while you'd cry "whiz is that!" Blur and turf, Paddy, doesn't that bate all?

Shure we had John A. up here and little Carther the Frinchman from Montreal, and some others that are frindly to the late min. They were all over at what is called the Welland Demonstration, where they got plinty to ate and dhrink I'll be bound to you. Do you know, afther all, I don't think the Frinchman was over wise in saying that they'd turn out the presint government on the 13th, to the day. Now Paddy, pon me sowkins, I know that its no aisy job to dispose of the min who hould the purse sthrings, whoever they may be; and be the man o' the moon, the language of the ex-attorny gineral Aist was, I'm afraid, rather hazardous. Betune this and the 13th, empires might be lost and won; and the morality of the polites of aither party is not so pure, or their numbers so clearly defined as to warrant an asserslun so bould. Time will tell and frosht will thry the cabbiges.

I am satisfi'd that we are not goin to lave the sait of govermint up here, no matther what may be said to the conthrary; and dear knows, I don't see what good it would do us at all at all, unless it was to be wid us for a permanency. Afther it was taken away from us agin, we'd go down as the city did afore. To be sure, it might give the check of our prosperity a slight blish of health for a monint; but the pull r would return bye and bye, and we would be just where we started. It is better for us to go along surely and quietly in the manner we now are than to be jumpin into hasty speculashun and stuff that generally burst like bubbles. What do you think of that my boy?

The crops are splindid up west here, and the marchants are beginnin to thank that our fall importations will be purty heavy. But did I tell you in my last that I was at a garmint pick-nick lately, a mile outside the city, when I saw the natest row that ever I laid my eyes on, which was begun by a new acquaintance of my own, who was a little the worse of liker. On goin up to the gate of the grounds he says to a very portly and clane lookin man who was takin the tickets:

"What's to pay?" sez he, puttin his hand in his pocket, and producin an English shillin.

"Half a dollar," sez the other eyein the quarther rather contimuously, "and if you have no more money you'll not get in here."

Sorra word more was said; and the next thing I saw was a scuffle, in which I joined without very well knowin why; and which became gineral, and wasn't indeed, until I was laid almost for dead, wid a sthroke of an empty bottle, and the 'oo lads that began the whole affair carried into a neighboring house, perfectly insensible, in a lither. I never saw sich weltin and tarin, for the time, in my life. The Garmins bein fat and full of lager beer were not so active as the other fellas; so they got the worst of it; although the whole of the band of the 10th were at their back and usin their brass instirtuments in a very liberal manner.

Mind my words for it, there will be a stormy time on the 13th, when the House opens. It is whis, ered that the Opposition are goin to pop a direct vote of Want of Confidence after the Spaker is elected, and while the Clark of the House is in the Chair. Paddy, rely upon it, that in Kanada amongst politicians, it is a scramble for office only; so keep your eye open accordingly and mind number one no matther what turns up.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

Arrival of the America.

New York, August 2.—The steamship America, from Southampton on the 22nd ult., arrived at noon to-day.

The Canada, from Boston, arrived at Queenstown on the 19th ult.

The Hecla, from New York, arrived on the 19th.

In the House of Lords the Duke of Argyle asked the Government to give facilities for establishing a Ship Canal from Lake Erie to Ottawa river for conveying grain through Canada instead of the United States.

Earl Grenville regretted that the Canadians had not provided sufficient militia for defence in case of war, and said it was impossible for England to defend Canada effectively unless the Canadians aided.

Mr. Morseman's resolution in favor of Poland was withdrawn.

The Times' city article says that the American news was received with surprise, disappointment and satisfaction—surprise at the sudden collapse of the Vicksburg defence—disappointment of the removal, owing to Lee's retreat, of all prospect of termination of the war, and satisfaction in contemplating English wisdom in not immaturely yielding to the recent pressure for Confederate recognition.

The Galway contract—the same as 1859—was approved in the Commons. Galway will be a port of departure.

FRANCE.

The Constitional regrets the impatience of those who demand the immediate publication of the Russian replies, and says the replies are being examined by the three Powers, who positively intend to agree on the means of settling the question definitely.

Paris journals consider the reply unsatisfactory.

The Nation says the intentions of the French cabinet regarding the Polish reply will be made known within three days.

Rentes 67.85.

RUSSIA.

Russia admits the six propositions, but rejects the armistice. The suppression of the insurrection is necessary, and an amnesty is offered meanwhile. She is willing to accept the principle of a conference itself, but does not admit the right of all the Powers who signed the final act of Vienna to participate in the conference until England, France, Austria, Prussia and Russia are agreed.

POLAND.

The Russian military officers are vested with administrative functions. A Cossack detachment while plundering Geracino, was cut to pieces. The insurrection in Sawogitia is increasing. 800 Russians were defeated near Subarto, and 500 at Sabota. The Russian conscription in Wilna, Grodno, Kowno, Volhynia and Kleinpoldalla is postponed. The Russians were beaten twice on the 15th, and once on the 18th ult.

AUSTRIA.

The Autrian Government is extremely dissatisfied with the last Russian reply.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.

The cotton market is firmer with an advance of ¼d on all descriptions, and a partial advance of ¼d on American.

Budget of South Australia

The Governor of South Australia has presented to the House of Assembly the estimates for that colony for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863. The estimated revenue from all sources except sale of land, is £565,155, while on additional sum of £145,000 is estimated as the produce of land sales in the year. This latter sum is divisible into two parts; of which one-third goes towards immigration, and two-thirds to public works. The departmental expenditure is on a higher scale than in some of the other Australian colonies. Chief clerks in the various offices appear to receive £400 a year, and £120 as the lowest salary granted to a clerk Constables are paid 7s a day, office messengers 8s a day for 313 days in the year. The sheriff is also returning officer, and has no under sheriff; his salary is £500 a year. 100 convicts are estimated to cost £3,745 for supervision and maintenance, and their labor is supposed to produce £1,500 of that amount. The letter-carriers have 7s 6d a day and their uniform. There are two inspectors of schools at £450 and £350, with forage allowance; and the amount voted in aid of schoolmasters' stipends is £12,000. The destitute poor are under departmental care, and they are estimated to cost £5,091. The Government printing office costs £1,355. The ecclesiastical vote is centred in one chaplain at £300 and a religious instructor to convicts at £150. State aid otherwise being unknown in South Australia. The Volunteer force costs £7,142, and her Majesty's troops in the colony receive £1,139 as colonial pay. Under the head of law officers appears Parliamentary draughtsman, at £500, in addition to the Attorney General and the Crown Solicitor. The colony has three judges and an insolvency commissioner. The Lands Titles Department costs South Australia £5,489 a year. The Customs, estimated at £230,000, are collected at an expense of £6,585. The Marine Boards are Government departments, costing with the lighthouses £10,801; while the revenue derivable from them is £4,250. The total receipts to meet this expenditure of £165,578 are £165,135, and £145,000 from land sales, which will leave the Treasury for the financial year the sum of £89,693 to pay interest and capital on the bonded debt for public works, amounting to £967,500, and still leave a considerable balance in the Treasury.

Early Wheat.

The Genesee Farmer for August says that since the advent of the midge the great aim of the wheat grower has been to get a variety that will come into flower a few days before the midge flies make their appearance. The reason why the Mediterranean is so much less liable to injury by the midge, (erroneously called the weevil,) is its earliness. But it is a wheat of comparatively poor quality. What is wanted, the Farmer says, is a variety of white wheat, "as good as the Soules, and as early as the Mediterranean." If such a variety can be found, it is hoped that it will be exhibited at the Great International Wheat Show to be held at Rochester, N.Y., September 8, 9 and 10, 1863. Such a wheat, the Farmer asserts, "would be worth millions of dollars to Western New York alone.

NEWSPAPER IN GREAT BRITAIN.—The number of newspapers delivered last year through the British Post Office was nearly 64 000,000, which is about half a million more than in the previous year; and the number of bookpackets was rather more than 14,000,000, being an increase upon the previous year of about 1,700,000,000, or nearly 11 per cent.

A MONTH AT SARATOGA.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL,
Saratoga Springs, 30th July, 1863.

DEAR SIR,—It is now nearly a month since, in company with a kind friend—who like myself—needed the healing properties of these partly celebrated waters, I landed from the cars greatly enfeebled by dint of ease and suffering from the fatigue of a long and tedious journey.

The weather during the first eight or ten days after we arrived here was excessively unpleasant, being a succession of changes from heat to cold, which were as unhealthy, as they were unpleasant. our visit however, bring one in search of health, and not pleasure, we no doubt felt the inconvenience much less than those whose only aim was to see, and be seen, and enjoy life for a season at a fashionable watering place.

Saratoga, which at other times would be taken for a quiet unpretending town of four or five thousand inhabitants, is, during the watering season, as busy and bustling as Broadway — every house being either a boarding-house or hotel, where board may be obtain for from $4 to $16 per week. Some of the hotels are very large, having accomodation for 700 or 800 guests. For those who desire to use the waters medicinally, it would be a great saving of time and money to consult a resident Physician.

The Springs—which number nine or ten,—are worthy of the same character, the chief difference being in the quantity of Carbonate of lime. As a Cathartic, the water of the Congress, Saratoga, and Empire are the most celebrated.—The columbian, Hamilton, High-Rock and others are more or less tonic, the waters of which must be used sparingly, and drank at the fountain during the day. The Congress spring from which such large quantities of water is bottled and shipped to all parts of the world, has been open to the public for more than half a century, and is at present the great rendezvou for morning drinkers.

The Empire Springs was opened in 1846 and has also obtained a high reputation; but the Spring which is destined to rival the Congress, is the "Saratoga Spring," recently opened near the High-Rock; the water of this Spring is clear, sweet, pungent and sparkling—it is, indeed a most agreeable morning beverage, and as a cathartic more powerful than the Congress.

A few days more will end my present sojourn at Saratoga, and although I feel that my stay might be prolonged with advantage to myself, yet my duty to the public requires that I should be elsewhere—and I must obey its call. During my stay here I have not been an indifferent observer of matters or things; and although I see much in the American character and people to admire, there is, as with ourselves much to condemn. I shall leave this with feelings of deep sympathy for them in this their hour of trouble; strong however in the hope that the great disposer of events will speedily end this cruel and purposeless war.

Yours,
A CANADIAN.

The correspondent of the Herald says after describing the late fight at Manassas Gap that Gen. Meade, by moving into Manassa Gap and preparing for battle, for which he was certainly justifiable having such information to guide him, lost two days and a half of time in his southerly march, and thus fully enabled Lee to reach the south side of the Rappahannock before Gen. Meade could possibly do so.

The steamer Belvidere, from Port Royal on the morning of the 29th, has arrived She brings the 174th Pennsylvania regiment. She passed Charleston bar at 11 a. m. on the 29th, and saw two monitors and the ironside th n engaged at Fort Wagner. Gen. Gilmor had succeeded in erecting a long line of batteries within 250 yards off Wagner. He had also mounted three heavy siege guns within a mile and a quarter of Sumter, which he would open on that Fort on the 29th, when all his siege guns are mounted. Gen. Gilmore feels confident of his ability to reduce Sumter. Our casualties continue small.

The New Orleans Era of the 25th inst says that Brashier City surrendered on the 22nd inst. to Capt. Johnson, of the gunboat Sachem.

The Great International Wheat Show

Notwithstanding the injury wheat has sustained in some sections from the midge and from rust, it is thought that the International Wheat Show to be held at Rochester, N. Y., September 8, 9 and 10, 1863, will be a great success. Competition is open to the world. Premiums are offered amounting to five hundred and forty dollars, and the time of holding the show has been fixed so that the wheat exhibited will be in demand for seed. On the last day of the exhibition a public auction will be held on the ground at which the exhibitors can offer their wheat for sale.

We are requested to state that parties from a distance who cannot attend the exhibition may forward their wheat and have it entered. Full particulars can be obtained by addressing the President of the Society, Joseph Harris, Rochester, N.Y.

A Riot in Ireland.

A terrible riot occurred in Belfast, Ireland, two weeks ago. A letter from Dublin, dated July 16, says:—

The rioting was renewed in Belfast on Tuesday night, notwithstanding the precaution taken by the magistrates. Orders were given that all the public houses in the disturbed district of the town should be closed at half-past five o'clock. Nearly four hundred policemen were on duty, posted in places where their services were most likely to be required; but Mill street and Castle street were early occupied by the Roman Catholic party of the belligerents, and they knocked down and kicked one of "the enemy" who happened to stray in among them. A soiree was being held in the Orange Hall, College street, and toward this the mob rushed, but were stopped by the police. Thus balked, they commenced to break in the windows in a number of Protestant houses in Queen street. The magistrates present were the Mayor of Belfast, Mr. Orme, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Vesner, Dr. McGee, and Dr. Mureny. Mr. Taylor was struck with a stick on the head, and Mr. Orme with a stone in the face. The Orangemen retaliated by breaking the windows of Roman Catholics, and among those whom they visited in this way was the Roman Catholic Bishop, Dr. Dorran. They also broke the windows in the house of the proprietors of the Northern Whig. The factions continued to smash the windows of their political and religious antagonists in various directions, and in one instance they would have wreaked their wrath on one another if a strong body of police had not rushed in between them. A considerable number of arrests were made, and about 12 o'clock the streets were cleared, and the police permitted to return to their barracks.

A JOLLY BEGGAR.—A beggar having a singular and suspiciously bulky appearance, was lately arrested in Stirling, and on being conveyed to the police office and searched, three bags of coppers to the amount of fourteen shillings, nearly all green with mould, were found sewed in bags, which were again sewed to the clothes on his person. A florin was found sewed and re-sewed with many folds inside of one of the vests. His costume was of a multifarious description. He had on his head three bonnets, and on his person were six sleeved waistcoats, sixteen shirts, and seven pairs of trowsers. Nine pairs of stockings and socks were stowed away in the pockets of his trowsers, and to save a pair of boots he carried them one below each arm, and walked on his bare feet. He said his name was Roger Tough, a native of the County Roscommon in Ireland, and that he had been engaged for five years in begging in this country, the clothes and money found on his person being the result of his campaign.—Scotsman.

The death of a young female, Mary Ann Welkley, in the service of a West End milliner, Madame Elise, a French woman, from exhaustion, caused by overwork, and the breathing of impure air, has caused a sensation in London. The facts attending the extinction of this young creature, as they were developed at the inquiry before the coroner, reveal a state of things about which the fine ladies who employ the court milliners can know nothing. Dr. Lankaster has made a report on the subject. "I found sixty ladies," he says, "working in two rooms which contained 3,450 cubic feet of air, and this gives but little more than sixty feet of air to each individual." It has been remarked that, in a sanitary point of view, these rooms have even less air than the Black Hole of Calcutta, into which though double the number were thrust yet many of them died a horrible death in the hours of a single night.

The fastest time ever made by a steamboat on the Hudson, was going from New York to Poughkeepsie, a distance of 75 miles, in three hours and forty-two minutes, including landings. The Mary Powell did it.

Cotton in Illinois.—It is estimated that Illinois alone will produce five hundred thousand bales of Cotton next year, and we understand that the Government of the United States have given instructions to their General in command of the Army in the South to have all the seed saved that is possible, for planting in that and other western States, but should their expectations not be fulfilled it is gratifying to know that we have a sovereign remedy for coughs, colds, cramps in the stomach, chotic, cholera morbus, and all complaints of the like nature, in the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," sold by all Medicine Dealers, 25 cts per bottle.

II. JOE PENTLAND'S CIRCUS, From the Academy of Music, Boston, and immediately from the Pacific Coast.

III. LENTS NATIONAL CIRCUS, From Niblo's Garden, New York.

IV. Wallace's Troop of ACTING BEARS, From California.

V. Derr's Educated SACRED BULL, From Hindostan.

VI. Wonderful LEAPING BUFFALOES, From the Prairies of the Far West.

VII. Professor Langworthy's Corps of PERFORMING DOGS and MONKEYS From all parts of the world.

☞ COMPRISING SEVEN DISTINCT EXHIBITIONS, ☜

All under one GIGANTIC PAVILLION for ONE single PRICE of Admission
The whole under the immediate direction of
L. B. LENT - - - - - Manager.

NOTICE.

It will be seen that the combination above given results in

AN ENTIRELY NEW CLASS OF AMUSEMENTS!

Such as has never before been attempted by private enterprise, and entails such an enormous expenditure of money, that only the most liberal patronage can render it remunerative. The Management will therefore be pardoned for directing attention to the fact that this Magnificent Phalanx of Exhibitions not only combines an infinitely greater degree of Novelty, Variety and Effect within itself than can be found in any other place of Amusement in the world, but also a nearer approach to PERFECTION IN EVERY DETAIL. For instance, the Three Circuses include by far ☞ the most Talented Array of Equestrians, Vaulters, Athletæ, Jugglers, Acrobats, Posture Manners, etc., etc., to be found upon either side of the Atlantic, while the combined collection of HIGHLY TRAINED HORSES, PONIES and MULES, include a larger number in the aggregate, and more beautiful and wonderfully trained individuals of each species, than can be found in any or all other Equestrian Exhibitions. In regard to the features peculiar to this establishment, of course there can be no room for comparison, and it can only be said that they will be found as pleasing and satisfactory as they are new and attractive. At each entertainment the TROUPE of ACTING BEARS will be introduced in the Arena in all their unprecedented performances; the EDUCATED SACRED BULL and the LEAPING BUFFALOES will exhibit their wonderful training; Professor Langworthy's Corps of PERFORMING MONKEYS, PONIES and DOGS will go through their astonishing and indescribably laughable feats, and all the principal Artists of the TRIPLE CIRCUS TROUPE will take part in an

UNPARALLELED DISPLAY OF HORSEMANSHIP AND ATHLETIC SKILL!

The veritable and inimitable JOE PENTLAND will officiate as Clown to the Equestrian Scenes. The public entree of the establishment, heralded by the Gorgeous Band Chariot, containing CHAS. BOSCOLD'S OPERA BAND, will take place about 10 o'clock on the morning of the day of Exhibition.

Admission to the combined Exhibition, only 25 Cents. No Half Price; no charge for Reserved Seats. Doors open at 2 and 7. Performance to commence at 2½ and 7½ o'clock, P. M.

Will Exhibit at Peterboro', MONDAY, AUGUST 10th.

Manilla, August 7th; Lindsay, August 8th; Port Hope, August 11th; Cobourg, August 12th; Percy, August 13th.

NOTICE.

THE Municipal Council of the united Townships of Smith and Harvey hereby give notice that they intend at their meeting to be held at the Town Hall, in Smith, on the 17th day of August next, to pass By-Laws for the following purposes that is to say: A By-Law to establish a Road, commencing where a post has been planted, on the easterly side of the River Road, on the 20th half of lot number one, east of communication road in said Township of Smith, at North West angle of a piece or parcel of land leased by John Robinson Benson to Martin Martyn, then easterly along the northern limits of said land 265 feet, more or less, to the north west corner of the Geist Mill, being the southern limit of a road to be laid out thirty feet wide, then at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-six feet, being the easterly limit of allowance for said road of thirty feet wide, then at right angles easterly fifty feet, more or less, to the River Otonabee, being the southern limits of that part of said Road.

Also,—A By-Law for closing that part of the allowance for Road in the rear of the lots on the east side of the Communication Road that extends easterly from the River Road to the River Otonabee in said Township of Smith, unless cause should be shewn why such By-Laws should not be passed.

CHRISTOPHER BURTON,
Town ship Clerk.
Smith, July 14th, 1863. 25-6in

BY-LAW No. 18,

OF THE

Municipality of Ashburnham.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees for the Village of Ashburnham, have required the Municipal Council of the said Village to raise the sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars for the purpose of building and furnishing a School House in the said Village; and whereas it is desirable and expedient that the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars be raised by Debentures, payable in five years; and whereas it will require that Debentures be issued for the sum of Sixteen Hundred Dollars to realize the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars, and to pay the interest, discount, and expenses connected therewith:

It is hereby enacted by the Municipal Council of the said Village of Ashburnham: That five Debentures be issued by the said Municipality, for the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars each: one of which shall be made payable on the First day of April in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868, and that the same be signed by the Reeve, and sealed with the Corporation Seal. And whereas, the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property of the said Village amounts, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, to the sum of Seven Thousand Five Hundred and Eighteen Dollars; and it will require that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be levied and collected in each year to pay the amount of the said Debentures:

It is hereby enacted, that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be raised, levied and collected on the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property in the said Village, over and above all other rates and assessments in the present year, 1863, and in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, to provide for the payments of the Debentures to be issued as hereinbefore mentioned.

And it is further enacted, that a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Friday the Seventh day of August next, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the Forenoon.

TAKE NOTICE,

That the above is a true copy of a proposed By-law which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality after one month from the first publication in the Peterborough Examiner, the date of which first publication was on Thursday, the Sixteenth day of July, 1863; and the votes of the Electors of the said Municipality will be taken thereon, at the Town Hall of the said Village, on Friday, the Seventh day of August, at the hour of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

SELECT POETRY.

Love's Young Dream—Now-a-days.

Oh! tell me not that distant sea
Roll wide between me and my love;
For he, I'm sure, is at his ease—
And I'm in clover.

And don't tell him that foreign parts
Will ever make me, dear, forget him;
Nor will he take to breaking hearts,
Unless I be him.

He writes to me by every post,
And every post takes back my answer;
He writes of 'sunshine,' 'sleighs,' and 'frost—
I of my dancer.

So don't tell him that I must mope,
While he's in Canada marauding;
He's neither Bishop, Saint nor Pope,
And end of shooting.

I wish you'd write to him some day,
How very badly I'm behaving;
He'd send back word at once to say
He thought you raving.

He likes my going to a ball,
And talking German with Lord Rowan,
D'ye think that, out in Montreal
He flirts with no one?

Ah! you don't know him. I must own
I've seen you flirt my pretty cousin;
But Willy sooner would flirt you down,
And several dozen.

Don't talk such sentimental stuff,
You remark as if I were a baby;
As Willy says, 'I'm not a muff,'
Nor he 'a baby.'

I know he's very fond of me—
I know I'm very fond of Willy;
And as to doubts and jealousy,
We're personally.

Cast[illegible]
—nonsense

A fop, [illegible] from a [illegible]
[illegible] liked the pains of [illegible]
[illegible] Willy' way of [illegible]
they are so dreadfully out of [illegible]

'Jemmy,' my boy, did you see [illegible] hat of hats the other evening?' 'Never the one my fancy; what kind of hats were they?'—'Brick-bats, ye spalpeen.'

You had better name your children after the deeds done than the famous living. 'Till a man ceases to set pus can't tell what sort of a name he will leave behind him.

Somebody says, a body laughing in its dreams, is conversing with angels. Perhaps so—but we have seen them crying in their waking hours as though they were having a spat with the devil.

Josah wrote to his father after the whale swallowed him, stating that he thought he had found a good opening for a young man going into the oil business, but afterwards wrote for money to bring him home, stating that he had been snubbed in.

Miss Tulip is speaking of old bachelors says:—"They are fortunate gardeners in the flower bed of love. As they are as useless as weeds, they should be served in the same manner—choked." A pretty sentiment for two lips to utter.

A cheerful face is nearly as good for an invalid as healthy weather. To make a sick man think he is getting well look half dead yourself. Hope and despair are as catching as cutaneous complaints. Always endeavor to feel sunshine, especially in a sick room, and to look so, too.

'Why don't you wash the bottom of your feet, Johnny?' asked a grandmother of a boy when he was performing the operation before retiring for the night, to which he very gravely replied:

'Why granny, yer doesn't think I'm going to stand up in bed, does yer?'

Young America is outdone. A French political candidate, stating his claims to office, in an address to the electors, says: 'At the age of six years I fought a duel in order to save the reputation of the daughter of a brave officer killed in the service of his country, which an artillery student was about to compromise.'

A baker once advertised: 'That as all men need bread, he wishes the public to know that he kneads it. He is desirous of feeding all who are hungry, and hopes his good looks may be in the mouth of every one. He is well disposed towards all men, and the last to eat people among us will find him, he hopes, one of the best bread men in the city.'

In an 'Essay on Women,' a writer remarks that beauties generally die old maids. They set such a price on themselves that they don't find a purchaser till the market is closed. Out of eleven beauties that have come out within the last eighteen years, ten are still single.—They spend their days in working great dogs on yellow wool, while their evenings are devoted to low spirits and French novels.

That's so.—In one of Caroline Gilman's romance (library copy) this passage was marked and much thumbed: 'There is no object so beautiful to me as a conscientious young man—I watch him as I do a star in heaven. 'That is my view exactly!' sighed Miss Josephine Hoops, as she laid down the volume. 'In fact, I think there's nothing so beautiful as a young man, even if he isn't conscientious!'

Yankee Ingenuity.—The Washington States says that not many years ago one of the slaveholding States regarded the clock peddling traffic within her limits as a crying evil, and enacted a tax so enormous upon each clock that should be thereafter sold within her limits, as to amount to virtual prohibition; but the Yankee was not slow in originating a plan for its successful evasion.—He loaned the household commodity for a period of ninety-nine years!

"Dead, Minister, I think shame to come to you," said an old dame who had sought the clergyman's kindly offices for the same purpose on four previous occasions. "What's the matter, Margaret, that you should think shame to come to me?" "Dead, sir, its just this—I have come to seek ye to marry me again." "Well Margaret, I do not see that ye have any occasion to think shame for, such a purpose. Marriage, you know, is honorable to all" "Deed isn't, sir; but it has come mickle o'late-ondy. I believe there never was one poor woman plagued wi' sonk dooing bodies o'men as I hae been."

Take Two or Three.—A troubled youth who lives not a thousand miles from this city was paying marked attention to a beautiful young lady, who rejoices in the possession of an interesting niece, about ten years old. The other evening he was enjoying a social chat with the young lady, wisely trying to screw himself to ask the terrible question, when the little niece entered the room. A new thought struck him. Taking her on his knee, he asked, in a quivering voice—

"Fanny, dear, are you willing I should have your aunt for my own? I will give you five hundred dollars for her."

"Oh, yes!" said the little thing, clapping her hands in glee. "But hadn't you better give me a thousand dollars, and take two of them?"

CONSULT
THE OLD ENGLISH PHYSICIANS
FOR
ASTHMA, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION,
Infirmities of Youth and Old Age,
&c., &c.
NO MERCURY USED.

Dr. Amos & Son,
48 EAST GENESSEE STREET,
BUFFALO, N. Y.

ARE the only Physicians in the State who are members of the Royal College of Surgeons, London.

May be consulted from 8 o'clock in the morning, until 9 at night, in every stage and symptom of Disease.

The treatment they adopt is the result of upwards of thirty years' extensive and successful practice in London.

A most Scientific Invention

An instrument for the cure of general Debility, or Nocturnal Emission, more properly known as Involuntary Weakness, &c. These complaints can be permanently cured in from fifteen days to two months by the use of this instrument, which is used conjointly with medicines.

Dr. AMOS & SON, in order to satisfy the most skeptical as to the merits of this instrument, pledge themselves that in any instance where it may prove unsatisfactory after a fair trial the money will be refunded by returning the instrument in good order. Price Ten Dollars, by mail or express.

CONSULTATION AND PARTICULAR NOTICE

Those who have injured themselves by a certain practice indulged in when alone—a habit frequently learned from evil companions, or at school—the effects of which are nightly felt even when asleep, and if not cured, renders marriage impossible and destroys both mind and body, should apply immediately. A few words is one of the most formidable enemies to health, for which we have in the above catalogue of human diseases a remedy. An obstructive drain upon the human system; for it is the thousands of vital fluids that are daily and hourly rendering down to an unmanly grave [illegible] destroys the nervous system rapidly, wasted away the energies of life, causes mental derangement, prevents the proper development of the system, disqualifies for the marriage, endless, loathsome, and all earthly happiness, and leaves the sufferer wrecked in body and mind, unfitted and unqualified to contemplate and a train of evils about to be described that dazzle itself.

PERSONS IN ANY PART OF THE WORLD may be successfully treated by forwarding a correct detail of their cases,

THE WORLD.

AN INDEPENDENT
Daily, Weekly and Semi-Weekly
NEWSPAPER.

IN collecting for another year a continuance and increase of the favor which in so short a period has given to the World its present rank among American journals—a circulation, business patronage, and influence equalled by other journals only after the effort of many years—we reserve to our old and new subscribers the promise that no labor nor expense will be spared to make the World what it aims to be,

The Best Newspaper in America.

In politics, now as ever, the World is independent but never neutral. Its only creed is a national one—of which are the corner stones.

The Union, the Constitution, and the Laws, and Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action

The political events of the past year have notably demonstrated the need of an able, fearless outspoken, first-class

Conservative Journal,

in the commercial metropolis of the country, which shall give constant, bold and vigorous utterance to the conservative sentiments of the best men and the honest masses of the nation. Opposing every enemy to whether armed in rebellion at the South, or insidiously planting the seeds of disunion at the North.

The Union,

Opposing every violation of the Constitution,

the only bond and hope of union, the only ground upon which we can exhort and compel the allegiance of the South:

Opposing every infraction of

The Laws,

in high places or in low, believing that obedience to Law is service to God:

Opposing every violation of the

Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action, by whomsoever those violations are committed, whether by the executive in its

Arbitrary, Illegal, and Unjust Arrests,

its refusal of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, its denial of the rights and liberties of citizens, its arrest without warrant, its imprisonments without trial, its abrogation of state and federal laws, its illegal proclamation of an empty emancipation, or whether those violations are committed by the party in power, its orators and its presses, advocating measures which must sunder the Union for the sake of destroying slavery, and denouncing treason against all their political opponents.

Loyal to the government always, it will give to the administration a hearty and vigorous support whenever and wherever the administration itself is loyal to the bond, the principles, and the purity of the government.

The World will oppose all compromises which would barter away or divide the Union, for which and which alone the present war is waged. It will oppose peace itself, till the success of the war assures the permanence of peace, and will urge the prosecution of the war with an economy which has not hitherto governed its expenditures, and a vigor which the nation during a year has prayed for in vain.

The same care will be exercised over the columns of the World to exclude everything which could offend a pure, Christian morality, and recourse will always be had to the same high principles as well to guard its columns as to guide its judgment of men and events.

All the News

will be found in the columns of the World from the various departments of human activity,

Political, Agricultural, and Commercial, as well as in Literature, Science and Art.

New Publications, Inventions, Discoveries, and Works of Art will receive the same careful and thorough attention.

The latest and most important news from London, Paris, Turin, Rome, Syria, China, California, Japan, Egypt, and South America, our correspondents will send to us.

Our correspondents are attached to the various divisions of the army; will accompany them wherever they go, and by the free use of the telegraph and the mails, present in the columns of the World

A Complete History of the War,

from day to day, and from month to month.

In the Weekly and Semi-Weekly editions of the World especially, large space will be given to

Agriculture,

and to all departments of

Manufacturing and Mechanical Industry.

The Weekly World will contain an admirable serial story during the current year.

THE DAILY WORLD.

The Daily World is the most complete Commercial and Newspaper published in America. Besides as full telegraph news, war correspondence, and foreign news, &c., as any two cent daily, it contains also much fuller commercial reports than any New York Newspaper. Its Money, Produce, and Cattle Market reports, Foreign and Domestic Importations, Stock Lists, and Commercial news, no business man can do without.

TERMS (VARIABLE IN ADVANCE):

One copy for one year, $6
Four copies for one year, $30.
For a club of ten copies an extra copy will be sent for one year.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY WORLD.

The Semi-Weekly World is a large quarto sheet, same size as the daily, containing all its news, correspondence, miscellany and editorials, its commercial reports, and its able and entertaining selections and miscellaneous reading. Its cattle market and provision reports make it highly valuable to every farmer.

EMPLOYMENT.

THE Undersigned has, for several years past, been engaged in a business which has yielded him at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum, and is now willing to teach it to others. The business is of a highly useful and general character, adapted both to cities and villages, and one that any person of ordinary capacity, young or old, male or female, can acquire with a few hours' practice, and by which they can secure a very handsome income. Several young ladies who have received instructions from me, both in New York State and Pennsylvania, are earning upwards of $15 per week by it, and there is no reason why any one else cannot do the same. Invalids, even, can do well by it, as it is no peddling affair, but a business that is perfectly respectable. Gentleman and ladies of leisure who would like to learn the business for their own amusement or pleasure, will find the practice of it a pleasant pastime, and one that they will take great interest in. On receipt of $1, I will send printed instructions by which any person can readily acquire the art, and these instructions will also contain every particular relative to the carrying it on so that it will be highly profitable. To purchaser of the "printed instructions" will also be authorized to teach it to others; and I have sometimes received as high as $300, for teaching it personally to a single individual. I would state further that $3.50 or $3 will buy everything that is necessary to commence the business with, and the articles can be got almost anywhere, in city or country, or if preferred, I can furnish them. FINKLE & LYON
EWING MACHINE COMPANY,
538 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is especially commended. This circular can be had on application. It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared without much care and we will abide by all statements therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changes and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family; for it will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and make every stitch perfect. Will sew from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the stoutest harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

This have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Defiantly can we now say, "No other Machine compares with it in this respect." Hence, we are uniformly—almost without exception—taken the highest premium, wherever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.;

"We warrant every Machine we sell to give better satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as strict as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based on mere "taking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch, viz., the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one-third the thread of other kinds of stitches.

N. B.—Local Agents wanted in every county throughout the West. ☞ Special inducements offered.

Poetry.

THY WILL BE DONE.

Of all the powers that test my faith,
This is the hardest one,
To gaze on that dear face in death,
And say, "Thy will be done."
In the wild struggle nature fails
And sinks affrighted down;
A moral grief o'er our faith prevails—
The cross obscures the crown.

So fast upon the pale, sweet clay,
Came down my blinding tears,
They veiled awhile his shining way
To the celestial spheres.
Oh, Thou who hast, with hand unseen,
Removed the loved to Thee,
Come now with helping grace between
The little child and me!

Miscellaneous.

A DAY IN PETTICOATS.

BY A MODEST MAN.

'I couldn't think of such a thing.'

"But you must. My happiness depends upon it. Here, put on the thingumbobs, and the what's his name,'

And my friend, Bob Styles, held up before my hesitant gaze a suit of female apparel.

His idea was that I should personate his lady love for one day, to prevent any one from suspecting the truth—namely, that she had joined him in a runaway marriage party—until it should be too late for interference, that is until the minister should have tied a knot between them, that nothing but a special grant of the Legislature could untie.

This scheme was not actually so absurd as it appeared at first sight. Maggie Lee was a tall, queenly woman, with an almost masculine form, almost effeminate, so that, in fact, there was very little difference on that point. Then I had light hair, tolerably long and a fair complexion. Part my hair in the middle, and put a bonnet on my head and few persons would have suspected but I really was one of the fairer sex. These accessories also gave me quite a decided resemblance to Maggie Lee, especially when, as in this case, the disguise was her own.

Then the day chosen for the match was an auspicious one. Maggie's father was to drive her to L——, a small village near where she lived, and there she was to join a sailing party down D—— river to the grave three miles below, from which the party was to return in the evening in carriages. Our plan was that I should be in waiting in the village, and should go on the boat with the sailing party, while Maggie after leaving her father, should ship off with Bob Styles across the country.

At last I got dressed, and presented myself before Maggy Lee, blushing a great deal I believe, feeling very much pinched about the waist, and with an uncomfortable consciousness that my—my—my new shirt sleeves were too short, or wanting altogether.

Everything finished in the way of toilet. Bob Styles took me into his light waggon, drove me over to D—— by a secluded rout, and left me at a hotel where the sailing party was to assemble. Several of the picnickers were already there, and greeted my cavalier cordially, (everybody knew Bob Styles,) asking if he was going with them, etc. He told them he was not.

'Pressing business engagements, you know, and all that sort of thing. Deuced sorry—I can't go, though. I had just time to bring Miss Lee over; and now I'm off. Mr. Blimby, this is Miss Lee, Miss Witheregal, Miss Lee,' and he rattled off a long string of brief looking introductions, which convinced me that few of the company were acquainted with the lady whom I was personating—a very fortunate thing for the preservation of my disguise.

Mr. Blimby, a tall, legal looking man, with a hook nose, and eye-glass and puffy hair, seemed to be prepossessed with my personelle, and I overheard him whisper to Bob Styles as he went out:

'Nice-looking girl that Miss Lee'

'Yes,' answered Bob, with a mischievous glance at me, 'though a little go-ahead sometimes. Keep a little look-out on her, will you,' and then lowering his voice, 'not a bad match for you, old fellow; she is rich!'

'Is she?' said Mr. Blimby, his interest deepening.

'On my honor,' replied Bob. 'Forty thousand dollars in her own right. Day day and he was gone.

Maggie Lee, artful creature that she was had told her father that the sailing party was to assemble at another hotel, and thither he had taken her. Having business in D——, he left her there, merely saying he would send the carriage for her at 11 o'clock. She, like a dutiful daughter, kissed him, bid him good-bye, and before he had gone a hundred rods, took a seat in Bob's light waggon, which had driven up to the back door as old Lee's carriage drove away from the front, and the old story of headstrong love and prejudiced age was enacted over again.

As for us of the pic nic excursion, we had a delightful sail down to the grove, but somehow I could not enjoy it as I ought to have done. When I walked on the boat I felt awkward, as if everybody was looking at me. I found Mr. Blimby, as I had suspected, a young and rising lawyer, mighty in Blackstone, in his own opinion. He insisted on paying for my ticket, and purchasing enough oranges, pears and candies to set up a street stand. Four or five times I was on the point of swearing at his impudent officiousness, but bit my tongue just in time to avoid the exposure. But it was not with him that I found my role the hardest to play.

No; the young ladies were the difficult ones to deceive. For instance, there was one among them, a beautiful girl of seventeen, just returned from boarding school who had not seen Maggy for three years. Of course she was delighted to see me when she found out that I was Maggie, which by the way, did not occur until after we had started. She threw herself into my arms, pulled my veil aside, and kissed me a dozen times, in a manner that made my fingers ends tingle for an hour. It was all very nice, but if I had been in propria personæ, I would have liked it better. As it was, I felt that I was obtaining goods under false pretences, and the lawyer Blimby might issue a warrant for my arrest, on that ground, at any moment.

A whole knot of crinoline then surrounded me on the upper deck of the boat to the utter exclusion and consequent disgust of Mr. Blimby, and the other gentlemen. I kept quiet only speaking monosyllables in a falsetto voice; but the others, Lord bless you, how they gabbled. Under a sacred promise of secrecy, the little boarding school maiden, who had kissed me most affectionately, revealed all her love affairs, and became unpleasantly confidential about other matters, innocent enough in themselves, but not customarily talked of between ladies and gentlemen.

I was terribly embarrassed, but it would not do to give it up then. As soon as my trick should become known Bob Style's trick would also come out, and as news of the kind travels fast in the country, he and his lady love would be telegraphed and followed before they could reach Philadelphia where the Styles family lived, and where the not was to be tied.

The river breeze was very fresh where we sat, and I noticed that several of the ladies were glancing uneasily at me. I couldn't divine the reason until Jennie, my little friend from boarding school, laid her face dangerously close to mine and whispered:

'My dear Maggie, your dress is blowing up terribly high: your ancles will be town talk for all the gentlemen!'

Nor was I conscious of having a very small foot for a man, and had donned a pair of open work stockings which came nearly up to my waist, with a pair of garters borrowed from a servant girl, in all of which buggery my 'running gear' looked quite respectable; but the idea of the gentlemen talking about my ancles, and of being cautioned thus by a young girl who would have been frightened to death if I had told her the same thing yesterday, was too much for me. I burst into a sort of strangled laugh, which I could only check by swallowing half of my filagree lace edged handkerchief. The young ladies looked at me in apparent astonishment at such a voice, and I wanted to laugh all the more. Fortunately, Mr. Blimby came to my rescue at the moment and edged himself in among the crinoline.

'May I sit here?' he asked, pointing to a low stool near me.

'Certainly,' I simpered, in my high falsetto.

'Ah, thank you,' said Blimby, with a lackadaisical air, which nauseated me, as coming from one man to another, 'you are as kind as you are fascinating!'

'You flatter me!'

'!! No indeed; praise of you cannot be flattery, Miss Lee.'

'Oh, sir, you are really a very naughty man,' I said by the most feminine voice I could command.

He cast a languishing glance at me through my black lace veil, and I fairly began to fear for his feelings.

We soon arrived at the grove and found our band—engaged before hand—awaiting us. Of course dancing was the first amusement; lawyer Blimby led me out for a schotti che. It was hard for me at first to take a lady's part in the dance, but I soon got accustomed to it. When a waltz was proposed I resolved to have a little amusement at the expense of the unfortunate Blimby.

I had at first made him purposely jealous by dancing with two other young fellows, one of whom I knew, in my own character, but who never suspected me as Maggy Lee.

This young man was a great woman killer—a sort of devil-may-care rascal, who made the ladies run after him, by his affected wrath of action and coolness of protestation—I selected to play off against my admirer. I allowed him to hold me very closely, and occasionally looked at him with a fascinating expression. When we stopped dancing he led me to a seat, keeping his arm around my waist and I permitted it.

Having thus started Blimby up to fronts of wrathful valor, I asked one of the gentlemen to direct the musicians to play a waltz. Blimby came in immediately.

"Ahem—a Miss Lee, shall I—a have the pleasure of trying a waltz with you?'

Now, I am an old stager at waltzing. I can keep it up longer than any non-professional dancer whom I ever met. As long as the cachucha or schonecrumen ring in my ears, I can go on, if it is for a year.

Not so Blimby. He pleaded want of practice, and acknowledged that he soon got dizzy.

'Ah-ha! old boy,' thought I, 'I'll give you a turn then!'

But I only smiled and said that I should probably get tired first.

'Oh yes!' he exclaimed, 'of course; I can waltz as long as any young lady, but not much more.'

For the first three minutes my cavalier did well. He went smoothly and cavenly, but grew warm. Five minutes elapsed, Blimby's breath came harder and harder. On he went, however, and I scorned to notice his slackening up at every round when he passed my seat. After some ten or twelve minutes, the wretched man gasped out between his steps.

'Ah, a—re you not—getting tired?'

'Oh, no!' I most burst forth as coolly as if we were riding around the room—'Oh, no, I feel as if I could waltz all night.'

The look of despair that he gave was terrible to see.

I was bound to see him through, however, and we kept at it. Blimby staggered and made wild steps in wild directions. His shirt collar wilted, his eyes protruded, his jaw hung down, and, altogether, I saw he could not hold out much longer.

'This is delightful,' I said composedly; 'and you, Mr. Blimby, waltz so easily.'

'Puff—puff—ah puff—ch—puff—very—puff, delightful,' gasped he.

'Don't you think it ought to go a little faster?'

He rolled his eyes heavenward in agony.

'Ah, puff—puff—I—don't—ah—puff—know.'

So when we neared the musicians, I said 'faster if you please—faster!' and they played as at the whirlwind.

Poor Blimby threw his fist about like a fast pacer, and revolved after the manner of a tee-to-tum which was nearly run down. At last he staggered backwards, and spinning eccentrically from me, pitched headlong into a small bevy of ladies in a corner. I turned round walked to my seat, and sent the young woman killer for a glass of ice water.

The miserable lawyer recovered his senses just in time to see me thank his rival for the water.

I got some idea from this of the fun the ladies find in tormenting us poor devils of other sex.

At this junction, and before Mr. Blimby had time to apologise for his accident, little Jenny came running into the pavilion which served as a ball room. As she came near I perceived that her hands were clutched tightly in her dress, and I positively shuddered as she whispered to me:

'Oh Maggie, come and help me fix my skirts; the are coming down!'

What should I do? I was in agony. A cold perspiration broke out on my forehead. I wished myself a thousand miles away, and anathematized Bob Style's masquerading project, inwardly, with fearful maledictions.

I said I was tired out—could not somebody else go?

No, nothing would do, but I must accompany her to the house of the gentleman who owned the grove, and assist her to arrange her clothing. So out I went.

What if it should be necessary to remove the greater part of her raiment? What if, in the midst of all embarrassments of being closeted with a beautiful girl of seventeen, in a state of comparative freedom from drapery, my real sex and identity should be discovered by her?

I felt as if an apoplectic fit would be a fortunate occurance just then.

However, I nerved myself up to the task, and accompanied Jenny to the house designated. An old lady showed us into her chamber, Jenny heaved a sigh of relief, and let go her dress. As she did so, a—pardon my blushes—petticoat fell to the floor. She was about to proceed, but I alarmed her by a sudden and vehement gesture.

"Stop!" I cried frantically and forgetting my falsetto; "don't undress for God's sake!"

She opened her eyes to their widest extent.

'And why not?'

'Because I am—am—a—can you keep a secret?'

"Why, yes, how frightened you look. Why, what is the matter? Maggie! you—why oh! oh! oh!"

And she uttered three fearful screams.

'Hush! no noise, or I am lost!' I exclaimed, putting my hand over her mouth.

'Yes, sir,' she said. 'I see you are a—a—a—

the immediate opening of all the treaty-ports. It was represented to them that surrounded as the Tycoon was by a hostile party, and jealous as the Japanese princes were of foreigners, it would be an act of consideration to the Tycoon to postpone for a little the demand for the opening of the ports. Her Majesty's Government at once agreed to that request, and, moreover, obtained the acquiescence of the French, Dutch, and other Governments which held similar rights. That was a proof that we did not wish to deal in any way harshly with the Japanese Government. At the very time the embassy was in England, the murderous assault on Mr. Richardson and his three companions took place, not, as had been erroneously stated, arising out of a quarrel, for there had been none, nor occuring on a high road from which Europeans had been excluded, for it was one to which they were expressly admitted by an arrangement with the Japanese authorities. It was a most outrageous and uncalled for attack. What could British Government do under the circumstances? They were bound to ask for reparation. It was their duty to demand redress for their unjustifiable outrage on unoffending British subjects, and they had made a claim both on the Japanese Government and on the Prince whose retainers were engaged in the attack on Mr. Richardson."

Such, then, is the turning point of the case, and little more is necessary, we think, than just to state it. By the last accounts the struggle between the Tycoon and the opposition party was still going on. According to Mr. Layard, the Tycoon personally did not think the demands of England were unreasonable. As for the Prince who lived near the coast, he could easily be got at and dealt with: but it was not ascertained whether the Prince would be held responsible by the Tycoon, or whether the British Government would have themselves to deal with him.

On these grounds, Mr. Layard very properly declined to produce the papers asked for by Mr. Cochrane, seeing it was contrary to all rule to publish instructions not yet carried out. It was to him matter for deep regret that Her Majesty's Government had been forced to take the course they had followed with Japan; but he did not see how, without a betrayal of trust, it was possible to act otherwise.

Russian Barbarities in Poland.

Letters from Ukraine, under date of the 2nd, state that in the circles of Vasilkeff, Swienk, Czarkowitz, Orchyn, and others there is no longer left a single proprietor who is not a prisoner, or a single mansion unplundered. In the encounters with the insurgents the Russian soldiers march to the attack under cover of bands of peasants. The Poles hesitates to fire on these unarmed men, and are often victims of their own forbearance. A person who describes himself as an eye-witness, gives the following details of one of these encounters:—After a horrible carnage, there remained about one hundred and eighty prisoners, exhausted by fatigue, covered all over with wounds, and dying of hunger. The Russian commandant ordered the peasants to strip these unfortunates of their clothing. The order was rigorously executed. They were stripped to their very shirts and shoes, though they had to walk twenty-eight leagues before reaching Kiew. They were then put in irons, and, completely naked, chained in groups of three to trunks of trees, which they had to drag after them. Among them there were some whose condition would invite tigers with compassion. There was, for instance, an old man of eighty-three, who had been sold to the Russians for three roubles. He could scarcely breathe, and looked more like a corpse than a living body. There was a boy of fourteen who had been caught with arms in his hands, his respiration almost gone, his eyes dim and sunk, and evidently near his death. These had as comrade of their chains a young surgeon, and when fastening his chains the Russians discovered that one his arms were broken. The guard wished to bind him only by the other arm, but the commandant would not allow it. With both hands tied behind his back, he was chained with the old man and the boy to the trunk of the tree, which they were not able to drag along. Two Cossacks, however, beat them with their whips, and they would probably have died in the effort but for another officer more humane, who took upon himself to relieve them. At Kiew, a general was awaiting the convoy. He paraded his men on the occasion, and allowed them to dance round the prisoners. Linen shirts and trousers were then issued to the prisoners before they entered the town. They were divided into three categories. The least guilty were shut up in a room hardly large enough for fifteen persons. In this they were obliged to remain standing so closely packed that it was impossible to move. They remained in this state whole weeks, and the writer says that he does not know whether they were afterwards transferred to another prison. The second category disappeared without anybody being able to find out what had become of them. The third was taken to the casements. The unfortunate two wretches were thrown into wells so deep and narrow that it was impossible to lie down. There they remain without a ray of light, and their miserable ration of food is let down to them by a cord. The brother of one of them by paying a bribe obtained a release, and when he came he was unable to recognise him, so changed was he. It is from this person that the writer got the foregoing particulars.

The news which arrives from Lithuania is affecting. Between Grodno and Vilno, the soldiers at the railway stations sing in the highway, 'Death to all the Polish wretches.' Near the churches armed soldiers are posted, who, as a pastime, use the butt ends of their muskets on passers by, both male and female.

The silence of the tomb broods over Polish Livonia and the Province of Alinsk, where Mouravieff, in the six weeks of his regime, has caused the disappearance of 10,000 families of landed proprietors. Confiscations are effected where the owners are females, who are, moreover, arrested or transported.

There is a rumor that Mouravieff is about to leave Wilna. When he arrived it is said he only asked four weeks for the re-establishment of order. He now considers he has done his work effectually.

The wife of the hero Sierakowski was banished three days after her confinement. Seven persons have lost their reason, among them the photographer Korsan, in consequence of taking a too strong dose of belladonna, administered to make them confess their secrets. Laskowitz before his execution was put to the rack, where his leg was broken and the soles of his feet burnt. Conducted in a carriage to the place of execution, he stigmatized to the assistants the conduct of the authorities. At Wilna, up to July 3, 32 captives have been starved. At Warsaw they are drowned in the Vistula in order to make place for others. The citizens of Augustowo canton, which belongs to Congress Poland, are transported to Kowno to be tried by Mouravieff.

JUDICIAL.

The late impression of our contemporary, the Peterborough Review, gives issue in its editorial columns to very unjust and uncalled for reflections upon the conduct of our county Judge in the execution of the duties of his office. In a proper spirit of deference to the usual propriety of the editorials of our contemporary, we feel called upon on this instance to record a well advised protest against the practice of making the conduct of our judiciary the subject of newspaper controversy; and to declare our thorough conviction that such a course of proceeding is most pernicious in its consequences, and will not properly come within the pale of what is commonly called the liberty of the press. Without delaying for the present either to affirm or deny the truth of the assertions to which we refer, we will proceed to the discussion of the subject from the text that is given us; reserving the right to address ourselves hereafter to the fact of these insinuations having their origin in some personal pique or imaginary misunderstanding. We had, heretofore, entertained some very charming ideas as to the superiority of our Constitution, including that portion of it whose policy it is to discountenance public discussion upon these matters to which we have reference, as having a tendency to bring the administration of justice into disrepute. And we are open to the acknowledgement that the perusal of the escapade in question was the cause of a considerable degree of surprise on our part, and the source of many serious regrets as to our misplaced confidence in the virtues of a Constitution which has ere this been honored even with the approbation of our much learned contemporary. Further consideration, however, somewhat mollified the harshness of first impressions, and—if, indeed, the wish did not father the thought—induced us to hope for a margin of debatable ground as to whether our Constitution or our contemporary was in error. It could not but have been within the knowledge of the presiding genius of that print, that a course, simple and easy of access, has been recently pointed out by Legislative enactment for the preferment of charges against county Judges; and that in the event of these charges being founded in fact, and in themselves inconsistent with official propriety, dismissal would follow almost as an inevitable consequence. And here, in accordance with the dictates of justice and in the true spirit of our laws, which are founded in justice, and which will condemn no man unheard, the accused will have ample opportunity of traversing such allegations as are made against him, and proving their falsity if not, in fact, founded in truth. We will further do our confrere the justice to suppose him not in ignorance of the fact, that a minister of justice would be sadly deficient in the dignity requisite to the proper fulfilment of his office were he to descend to altercations in the columns of a newspaper with any and all those whose particular object it may be to injure his reputation or who have some personal animosity to gratify. Bearing in mind these considerations a moments reflection will lead our friend to the manifest impropriety of seeking to make the columns of his Journal the medium of such ungenerous and ungentlemanly insinuations. Ungenerous because they are vague and ill defined, and are not sufficiently specific to admit of refutation, were such a course otherwise admissible. And ungentlemanly because none knew better than the writer, that they must necessarily borrow something of plausibility from the fact, of him whom they were designed to injure being so peculiarly situated as to preclude the possibility of reply. The charitable disposition of mankind would be shocked at the impropriety of, and would stigmatize as cowardly and brutal, that man so forgetful of his better nature, as to ruthlessly strike a fellow creature whose hands were tied behind his back. Would he be anything the less entitled to the contempt of mankind, who aims at the reputation of a public officer whose hands are so securely fastened, as to forbid him returning the blow, or defending himself? Nay, as humanity is prone to estimate more dearly their reputation than their personal security, would not the latter offence be immeasurably superior to the former?

We doubt not, but our contemporary will essay to confirm the propriety of the course he has adopted, by advancing the obligations of the press to bring all such matters under the view of the public; and thus whilst mitigating the enormity of the blame attachable to himself, may give more effectual consequence to those designs which, we regret to say, are only too palpable. But, although the privileges and the immunities of the press are terms that are capable of doubtful and various interpretations, they never were and never will be interpreted to give impunity to attacks which in themselves are disreputable and unjust, and in their consequences detrimental to the public weal. We do not come forward as the apologists of Mr. Boucher, neither do we admit the truth of the article to which we refer; but the opinions to which we have now given expression are those which were prompted upon the perusal of the subject of our remarks. The course of our daily calling does not bring us very frequently into communication with the gentleman whose reputation is animadverted upon, nor, we are happy to state, does the position of our exchequer give us very ample opportunity of judging upon such matters from experience. We are in consequence, at present, necessitated to discuss not so much the accusations themselves, as the impolitic manner in which they are advanced.

SELF AND PRINCIPLE.

The two great antagonistic elements that are continually warring against each other in man's breast are self and principle. Self is ever prompting to do one thing, principle not unfrequently another. In the actions of every day life, as well as in the more extended movements of the commercial and political world do we see our statement exemplified and illustrated. In fact, what we often attribute to principle—if we would but honestly and impartially scrutinize our real motives, and ascertain the real mainsprings of our actions—would be with more propriety attributable to self. How many a noble action that the world has applauded, and still applauds for the brilliancy, the humanity, and the disinterestedness that characterized it, would pale and sink into oblivion were the real cause of its development and consummation laid bare. On the other hand how many a deed that the world knows nothing of now, would fix itself in the memories of hearts of men, were the sacrifices of self, the disinterestedness of motive, and the big-heartedness that gave it birth only known. Indeed, it is no easy thing to discriminate between actions so as to assign each to its peculiar cause. The attempt is often made but oftener it is believed without success than with it. No wonder. For in the most obvious of cases, by the wisest of men, and under the most favorable of circumstances the certainty of man's judgment of another's motives, must at best be but probable. It may be correct, and it is just as possible that it may not.

We had a right to condemn actions of measures, if we are fully persuaded of their past evil effects, or fear their future pernicious influences; but we must strongly doubt if we have, in strict accordance with the teachings of justice, and the promptings of an honest and generous nature, a right to unqualifiedly impugn and condemn the motives that the authors of these measures or movements were actuated by in proposing and perfecting them. They may have originated in some direct or indirect impulse of self: but they may on the other hand, however unfavorable the aspect, owe their existence to the spontaneous throbbing of genuine principle. We may surmise, but our surmises may have no foundation. 'Appearances are device,' is an old maxim which is not less likely to hold true here than elsewhere. Likewise may not the willingness and asperity with which we are so prone to criticise and find fault with another's actions and impugn his motives be more owing to some spring of self than of principle. We believe they may. Hence, since it must be admitted that no discrimination is so keen—even when free from blinding or preventing prejudices as to ascribe with certainty the actions of others to their legitimate motives, no one that appreciates truth and candor, can help viewing with feelings of disapprobation the course of conduct that public men pursue one to another. They not only disapprove of one another's acts, which they may perhaps conscientiously do, but they make it a point to ascribe to them the most unworthy motives and speak in as positive terms as though the innermost thoughts of the heart were open to them. Their knowledge, it is evident, is a mere assumption and it may be unworthy of credence. This should make people careful in reading articles of a political nature, especially those in whose political characters are animadverted upon. There are two sides to a picture—a bright as well as a dark one. People should not be led away with the declamatory phillipics of needy and anxious aspirants to office and their followers, upon those in power. The fact of being in power does not necessarily imply an absence of principle and the supremacy of self. On the contrary, some of the most disinterested men that the world has ever seen have been the tenants of office. Neither, on the other hand, does the being out of office prove the converse of the proposition. This should be borne in mind.—Office is, now-a-days, in one's mind almost inseparably connected with self. This should not be. It is an association that should not exist. We hope there is really less cause for it than is believed by many.—Men, from principle, much against their own inclinations and interests, often assume office, whereas to the superficial and but partially informed looker-on it might seem as if they were influenced by self in so doing. It cannot be denied, however, that self is the dominant spirit in the world today, but we believe there are many good and noble ones who go right ahead in the discharge of every duty—altogether unshackled and uninfluenced by it. It is on this account we should be careful how we judge.

FIREMEN'S PIC-NIC.

The Firemen's Pic-nic, which took place yesterday, was a splendid affair. A long procession of firemen, their wives, sweethearts, and other friends, headed by Philp's Brass Band, left the Town between 9 and 10 A. M., all looking in their best spirits, and as if they anticipated a good time at the "Lake." And when they got there a good time they had, indeed. The Company divided itself into groups. The Lake soon became covered with boats of all descriptions. Those who were not in the boats ranged the woods, or whiled away the time in amusements of a most pleasant and interesting character. The Dinner and Supper were got up in a style that reflects the highest credit upon Mr. Faucher, who was entrusted with this important duty. All returned home highly delighted with the pleasures and entertainments of the day. As the result, we expect to chronicle some very important marriage items shortly. So mote it be.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, August 3rd, 1863.

The Council met. Present: His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs Toole, Fry, Lawson, Dixon, Burnham, Lundy, Ryan, Clinton, and Nicholls.

The minutes of former meeting were read and confirmed.

Several accounts were received and handed to the finance com.

A petition from Martin McDonald, asking the council to refund the fine and fees imposed upon him by Mr. Henthorn was read and received.

Moved by Mr. Lawson and seconded by Mr. Burnham, that a brick building 25 feet wide in the clear, of the same depth as Mr. Hopkins' buildings, and three stories high, with gravel roof, be erected in that part of the Market Block fronting on Simcoe Street, and adjoining Mr. Hopkins building on the East side thereof, be erected for the present use of an Engine House, Fireman's Hall and Lock-up. The Lock-up to consist of two rooms and to be in the basement story; the Engine House on the ground flat, and the Fireman's Hall on the second story.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Lundy and Seconded by Mr. Burnham, that Messrs Lawson, Toole and the mover, be a special committe on the part of this Council to contract for and superintend the construction of the building designed at present for an Engine House, Fireman's Hall and Lock-up; and it is a request of this council that they carry out the objects of this resolution without delay and without waiting for further instructions.—Carried.

On motion of Mr, Nicholls the Mayor was instructed to sign on behalf of this Council a Memorial to the Legislature, praying the passage of the Act to Legalize the arrangements with Mr. Covert connected with the Milbrook Branch and to confirm the Lease and Mortgage of the said Branch and to forward said Petition to the members of the County and Division in the Legislative Council, the Memorial to be the same as that presented to the last Session of Parliament.

On motion of Mr. Nicholls, Mr. Conger member of the County of Peterboro, and the Hon. Billa Flint, member for the Trent Division, were requested to assist by every means in their power, in the passage of the Bill, to confirm certain instruments connected with the Milbrook Branch of the Port Hope, Lindsay and Beaverton Railway, and to legalize certain arrangements entered into between the Town of Peterboro and the Lessees of the said Millbrook Branch.

COURT HOUSE HILL.

Great progress is being rapidly made in the improvements upon the Court House Hill. Quite a change has already been made in the appearance of the place, and as a large number of men and horses are still at work, we may expect that in the course of a week or so, the hill will be so completely metamorphosed that people will hardly recognize it. It is about time to think of embellishing our Town, and we know of no better way of doing this than in getting up Park like enclosures, properly graded, and planted with shade and ornamental trees. Indeed, if all our streets were lined with shade trees, the Town would be greatly beautified, to say nothing of other advantages that would result therefrom. Let the good people of the Town then undertake the laudable example set them by the County and Town Councils in this respect.

COUNTY OF BAGOT.

MR. LAFRAMBOISE, the new Commissioner of Public Works has been elected in his old constituency by a large majority The Opposition candidate was Mr. Cartier's own brother-in-law. Nothing was left undone that could be done to defeat Mr. Laframboise. The Government and Mr. Laframboise have both reason to be proud of the result of the election.

We have been authorized to say, that the minutes of the late Trustee Meeting were not published, by the order of the Board. The conduct of the Review was most disreputable and dishonorable. We forbear saying more until the next meeting of the Board, when we believe the whole matter will be thoroughly investigated into. We know that many of the Trustees are highly indignant.

THE Writ for the election in the Newcastle Division has been issued. Several candidates are in the field, but no one, as yet, has been endorsed by the Reform party. It is time that the friends of Reform and the Government were at work.

THE members of Capt. Kennedy's Light Infantry Company will meet in their Drill Room, on Monday the 17th inst., at 2 P. M., that day being appointed for target practice.

The Draft---Number Required.

The Draft will take effect in the twenty-one Northern States, including the new States of West Virginia and Missouri. The number of conscripts required is 395,-160, apportioned as follows:—Connecticut, 8,880; Delaware, 2,220; Indiana, 24,420; Illinois, 20,860; Iowa, 10,320; Kentucky, 19,80; Kansas, 2,220; Maine 11,100; Massachusetts, 22,220; Maryland, 11,100; Michigan, 13,320; Minnesota, 4,440; Missouri, 19,980; New York 71,040; New Jersey, 11,1000; Ohio, 42,-180; Pennsylvania, 58,280; Rhode Island 4,440; Vermont, 4,440; Wisconsin 12,-320; West Virginia, 6,660.—Total, 305,-160.

It is announced that Government will proceed against the defaulter to the Municipal Loan Fund, Crown Seigniories, and Quebec Fire Loan arrears in both sections of the Province.

George Goble, of Oswego, has laid the keel of another new vessel, which it is designed to have ready for sea in eight weeks. She is to be of the largest size for navigating the Welland Canal.

LANTY MULLINS' LETTERS

TORONTO, PARK LANE—THAT WAS—? August 10, 1863. §

To Paddy Maloney, Ould Denny's Son, Peterboro, Kawvela West:

Do you bear me a trick? In throth, if you do, you may as well be shouldherin your musket for nothin in life will do the Yankees but goin to war wid Britain and France as well as wid half the world besides. They are angry you see, bekase England lets an odd "Iron Clad" be built in her shipyards for the South; although, accordin to Lord Palmerston, they buy guns, amunition and wapons from her themselves, for the purpose of fighten against the Coofedherates.—Paddy! what's the difference? Shure its all in the way of murther; and she just obleeges one party as much as the other; so his Lordship thinks; and I can tell you that his opinion is backed up by Lanty Mullins. Well, apart from the frindly intentions of the North attords us, don't you think, that afore they go to say against our Navy, they had betther dispose of the Alabama and Florida and one or two more vessels, for you see, that it will be necessary for thim to sweep these little annoyances from the high says, previous to their commincin to desthroy the navies of the two great maratime powers of Europe. At prisent, I undherstand, that no inconsidherable portion of their shippin is obliged to keep in Northern Ports, not darin to show its nose tin miles from land, for fear that those ugly Southern jokers would blow them out of the wather. Be this as it may, the Fedherals are in no way thrin to enther upon a war with a powerful innemy just now; for the ginneral impression is, that they have enough to do at home, and but little to do it wid.

As the 13th approaches, the note of preparation begins to rise on the gale up here; and as I have often said, the Sessions bids fair to be a stormy one. It is, however, supposed, in high quarthers, that the Ministhry will put in their Spaker and have a small majority with which to carry on the business of the counthry. As to the majority bein not over large, so much the better; as this circumstances alone will keep the Governmint up to the mark and shorten their tether so as that they cant play minny pranks wid the intherests of the Colony or the contints of the Public Chest. We had, as you are aware, the Hon. Mr. McGee—I mane Darcy—up here, a couple of days ago; but he is sich a cunnin and close mouthed fella, whin he likes, that the divil a much the quid nunes, as they call them, could get out of him. Let me till you, howsomdever, that he opened a good bit of his mind to me, that Rep. by Pop. and the sait of Governmint question were goin to puzzle John Sanfield turribly; although the complate purchase of Isaac Buchannan sthrengthens his hands wonderfully. Isaac, you see, will do anythin and everythin for the intherests of Hamilton, no matther who is in power; so there's no use in lookin for aither principle or politics in sich men. Be my sowkins, afther all, he may not be far wrong. The people of Hamilton sint him to Parliimint to relieve thim of their honest burthens; and knowin this, he, of course, is tied neck and heels to their chariot. Well, no matther how this part of the subject may turn out, there is one fact, anyway, which cannot be contradicted; and that is, that no matther who wins, Isaac can laff in a manner that will create the most ginneral and humorous attention.

On Wednesday last, we had a threminduous influx of distinguished Americans here, all on their way to Monthreal, I bleeve, with a view to attendin some grate thrade meetin. They were resaved at the Union Station, by some of our first sitizen, and enthertained at Smith's Saloon in grate style afore they left They were very badly dhressed, and all looked as if they wore linen "hand me downs," although they were most agreeable, and stood the inflection of their short, round nosed boots admirably. At the enthertainment, Mr. Brydges, Managin Directher of the Grand Thrunk, complimented them by statin, on the part of the people of this Province, that the whole of our sympathies were wid the North; although he knew as well as I do, that the divil a bigger fib was ever utthered by aither the Globe or the Ludher. Darcy, too, wint off in the same rain; but sinsible I am, that it was only meant to assist the sale of his new Histhory of Ireland among the people of the North.—Now let me tell you, Paddy, that I know the thrue feelins of this city at laste on the subject of the Amer can war, and I do say without hesitation, that the nine-tenths of the inhabitants are in favour of the South; and I am certain that the Province throughout is similarly affected.

You barde, of course, of the Manitoulin throubles. Well, up here, we made a nice display of ourselves in relation to that same. The Indians and the people, it appears, riz again the law, and were goin to play the divil and all; whin down a loyal chap comes to get a few police-min to help to enforce ordher and establish the sway of the constituted authorities. Now, although the Irish were never much given to law or ordher, begorra, I was fairly incensed at an ignorant lump of a fella that we have in the Corporation here, who got up and disgraced us all by sayin, that the Governmint ought to get no aid from us in the matther, as some of its members were not over frindly to the intherests of Toronto. I give you my word, that I was glad whin I harde that this same piece of rubbage wasn't Irish; for such a revolutionary and villainous sentiment could be utthered only by some low bred enther loper who was more fit to handle a shovel in a sand pit than to sit in the midst of a deliberative body. I am glad, howiver, to inform you, that his idays, regardin the administhration of the laws, are bitthorly repudiated throughout this section of the counthry; and that it is more than probable whin he next solicits the suffrages of any of our citizens, he will be sint about his business wid a flay in his air.

Will you bleere me whin I tell you, that sorra a fight I have seen up here since I wrote to you last; although, indeed, I harde that Darcy behaved himself rather indifferently on the night followin the blow out at Smiths. I harde it was Governor Dallas they call the felle that he had the row wid, and all because that same gintleman tould him that monarchy wasn't shuted to this counthry. Darcy got the best of it, howiver, and sint His Excillency to bed wid a pair of peepers that didn't look over well the next morning. And do you know that afther all, they were the best of frinds next mornin and wint off to the Falls together. I'll hould you a tasther, that Dallas has some Irish in him. I'm done now; and success to you, me bouchal, for sindin me the five gallon kag—with

Yours to command,

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Peterborough, August 10th, 1863.

Dear Sir,—In the Review of the 30th July last, and of the 7th inst., there are articles which are calculated to affect the administration of Justice in our County; it is a pity such articles were ever written, for although I am well satisfied they will not have the effect their author desires, still the very fact of an accusation having been made against the mode in which the affairs of our Courts are conducted, is calculated to lessen public confidence in those Courts, and so make suitors, against whom adverse judgments may be given, willing to attribute such judgments to every other reason but the right one the wish of the Judge to act according to equity and good conscience. The article of the 30th of July, was over the signature O. P. Q., but it is generally believed to have been written by the Editor of the Review, and that it was only written as a sort of text for the article in the last Review, and such other articles as he may hereafter deem it desirable to write on the subject; it is principally devoted to the extravagant costs in a particular suit, which costs are said to bear a large proportion to the whole amount sued for; now the Editor of the Review ought to know that the costs upon a suit for $20, such as witness fees, hearings, and mileage upon service, are as great as they would be upon a claim of $100. It is generally understood that the case referred to by O. P. Q., was a case of Calbert vs. Covert, an action for damages arising out of the killing of one of plaintiff's cows by defendant's locomotive; and if this is correct, you will easily perceive the difficulty that must arise, the whole law between Railway Companys and the owners of the land along which they run, and the rights and liabilities of the respective parties, as to fences, &c., had to be considered; there were some fifteen witnesses in all examined, who had to be subpœnaed and paid, and the case took up a great deal of the time of the Court; at the first trial points of law were raised to be argued in chambers, and there were some three different hearings before the case was finally decided, these hearings appear to be a chief cause of complaint to the Review, and he would seem to desire to convey that by the Judge charging an additional hearing fee, he puts money into his own pocket or that of some officer of the Court, when the fact is that not one cent of the hearing fees complained of goes into the pockets of the Clerk or any other officer, but they are all paid by the Clerk to the Government with the rest of the Fee Fund monies received by him; then what object can the Judge have in imposing an additional hearing other than a sense of his duty; perhaps the Editor is annoyed because he does not make an exception in favor of his clients.

Then another cause of complaint of the Review is, that there is no right of appeal against the decision of the Judges of the Division Courts, now it happens that this want has been long felt in almost every County in Canada, and for the last two Sessions of Parliament, efforts have been made to amend the Act in this respect, and I have no doubt that such an amendment will be made this coming Session, but surely the Review does not wish to charge this omission in the Act, on the Judge of this County. The Review however does say specifically that the cause of the high costs is the Judges habit of postponing cases—this charge is as unfair as it is untrue, the Review knows right well the Judge cannot condescend to notice his article, and he fancies it will go unanswered; now I would ask you or any other candid man, what object can the Judge have in postponing cases, the fact is that he is averse to it, that he will not do so, unless the party seeking the postponement makes an affidavit that he has a good defence to the action, and that from some cause beyond his control, he is unable to proceed to trial at that sittings of the Court, in short, he must make such an affidavit as would be sufficient ground for a Judge of the Superior Court sitting at Nisi prius, to put off the trial of a case then before him, and then in order that there may be no unnecessary delay in suitors having their cases decided; the Judge here, has for the last two years, held an additional Court on the first Monday of each month, thus giving twelve more Courts in the year than he is required by law to give; he is only required to hold a Court once in every two months, or six times in each year, and and yet he has added twelve additional days in each year to the business of the Court, making in all eighteen Courts in order that it may be properly administered. The Editor of the Review has had comparatively little to do with the Courts yet, and it may be that what he has had, has not turned out so favorably as he and the people who have entrusted him their business could wish; but I think it is hardly fair to endeavour to throw the responsibility of adverse judgments on the Judge; perhaps if he looked closer he might find a great deal of his trouble has arisen either by his client having a bad case or his want of tact in discharging the strong points in it. The Review puts a case of an account for collection, and that through the delays of the judge upon some technical point, the creditor is kept out of his money for six or twelve months, and in the meantime the debtor makes away with his chattels. Now I challenge him to show one such case. I wonder why a poor debtor should not be allowed to raise any defence that will enable him to get time to make the money to meet the demands of his creditor; most of us have enough to do to pay our debts when compelled to do so, and most of us know that we will get no mercy from some creditors when once a judgment is obtained against us, but I never knew of such defence being allowed to remain over for even two months. There must be merits shown to exist, or, in my experience, no adjournment has ever been allowed. It is a strange thing that all this trouble and delays has never been complained of or known to exist until the Editor of the Review undertook to conduct cases in the Division Court—but it is really too bad that the Judge and all the officers of the Court cannot see the necessity there is that they should attend to everything or anything that Mr. Tom White has anything to do with, to the exclusion and delay of less highly favored mortals who may happen to have any business to attend to. I have no doubt a few more such articles will intimidate them all so much, that even the Editor of the Review and the gentleman who inspires him say is law, shall be taken to be law. Our Courts have got on before either of those gentlemen took to practice in them; and it is generally believed they will get on should they take into their legal heads to fit to some other more desirable locality. Perhaps the Review could select a gentleman to preside over the Court who would do just as he likes—it may be he has one already in his eye.

I am, with best respects to the Review and its master,

Yours truly,
X. Y. Z.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

New York Aug. 7.—The bombardment near Charleston was more spirited on the 29th. The Federals were erecting their new batteries within 600 yards of Fort Wagner. Our new batteries on James Island were causing them much annoyance. 2,000 more Federals had been landed on Folly Island. The Yankees had captured 3 blockade runners.

Parties from Middle Tennessee represent the condition of the people as horrible, they having nothing to eat.

New York, July 8.—The Tribune prints the following:—A furious and bloody draft riot at Sugar Grove, Warren county, Pa., is described to us by a correspondent. He says that when the draft began on Tuesday morning an armed mob suddenly appeared and ordered the Marshal to stop. He refused, when the mob fired into the room, killing the Marshal, Hugh Quinn, and three others, and wounding several more; they set buildings on fire and started to sack the finest houses in the place. A negro nearly blind, was killed, and another negro's shop was destroyed. The Home Guard and the citizens flew to arms and in a short time the rioters were confronted by a force of 100. The Captain gave them five minutes to disperse, but they refused. The guard fired, killing the leader and eight other rioters at the first volley. The mob returned the fire, killing five citizens. They got another volley and then the bayonet, and were put to flight, running into a building they used as a rendezvous. Here they were surrounded, and finally taken to jail. The people were furious, and made desperate efforts to get at the villians and hang them on the spot. As it was, thirty-six of them were killed. Such are the main features of the writer's detailed account. We prefer to hold the letter back until some confirmation of the rather large story arrives in the usual course.

'Orange, C. H., August 5th.—There was a fight at Brandy Station yesterday evening between a body of Stuart's cavalry and Major Brockham's horse artilley and three brigades of Yankees with cavalry, and 12 pieces of artillery.

PRINTING WITHOUT INK.—A gentle man, a large capitalist, and one of the most successful inventors of the day, has succeeded in chemically treating the pulp, during the process of manufacturing printing paper, in such a manner that when the paper is impressed upon the inoked types the chemical particles are crushed, and a perfect black impression is the result. The advantage sought to be obtained is the discarding of ink and rollers; and by revolutionizing printing machinery, and printing from a continuous roll of paper, it is calculated the time occupied in impressing large quantities of paper will be nominal in comparison to the requirments of the present day.

THE BIRD'S WING AND THE RAIL.—It appears from a trial lately made at Bourges that carrier pigeons can still compete in speed with railways. Last week 145 pigeons were liberated at Bourges at five o'clock in the morning to decide a wager. The first prize was gained by a pigeon which arrived at his pigeon-house at Verviers at 54 minutes past 12. The last arrival was at 11 minutes past 1. Thus, in less than nine hours, these birds performed a distance of 150 leagues, or 375 miles—a speed which no French Railway can equal.

NOTICE.

THE Municipal Council of the united Townships of Smith and Harvey hereby give notice that they intend at their meeting to be held at the Town Hall, in Smith, on the 17th day of August next, to pass By-Laws for the following purposes that is to say: A By-Law to establish a Road, commencing where a post has been planted, on the easterly side of the River Road, on the South half of lot number one, east of communication road in said Township of Smith, at North West angle of a piece or parcel of land leased by John Robinson Benson to Martin Martyn, then easterly along the northern limits of said land 265 feet, more or less, to the north west corner of the Grist Mill, being the southern limit of a road to be laid out thirty feet wide, then at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-six feet, being the easterly limit of allowance for said road of thirty feet wide, then at right angles easterly fifty feet, more or less, to the River Otonabee, being the southern limits of that part of said Road.

ALSO,—A By-Law for closing that part of the allowance for Road in the rear of the lots on the east side of the Communication Road that extends easterly from the River Road to the River Otonabee in said Township of Smith, unless cause should be shewn why such By-Laws should not be passed.

CHRISTOPHER BURTON, Town ship Clerk.

Smith, July 14th, 1863. 2-4in

BY-LAW No. 18,

OF THE

Municipality of Ashburnham.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees for the Village of Ashburnham, have required the Municipal Council of the said Village to raise the sum of Two we Hundred Dollars for the purpose of building and furnishing a School House in the said Village; and whereas it is desirable and expedient that the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars be raised by Debentures, payable in five years; and whereas it will require that Debentures be issued for the sum of Sixteen Hundred Dollars to realise the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars, and to pay the interest, discount, and expenses connected therewith:

It is hereby enacted by the Municipal Council of the said Village of Ashburnham: That five Debentures be issued by the said Municipality, for the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars each; one of which shall be made payable on the First day of April in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868, and that the same be signed by the Reeve, and sealed with the Corporation Seal. And whereas, the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property of the said Village amounts, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, to the sum of Seven Thousand Five Hundred and Eighteen Dollars, and it will require that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be levied and collected in each year to pay the amount of the said Debentures:

It is hereby enacted, that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be raised, levied and collected on the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property in the said Village, over and above all other rates and assessments in the present year, 1863, and in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, to provide for the payments of the Debentures to be issued as hereinbefore mentioned.

And it is further enacted, that a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Friday the Seventh day of August next, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the Forenoon.

TAKE NOTICE,

That the above is a true copy of a proposed By-law which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality after one month from the first publication in the Peterborough Examiner, the date of which first publication was on Thursday, the Sixteenth day of July, 1863; and the votes of the Electors of the said Municipality will be taken thereon, at the Town Hall of the said Village, on Friday, the Seventh day of August, at the hour of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

SELECT POETRY.

SONG OF SARATOGA.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

"Pray, what do they do at the Springs?"
The question is easy to ask,
But to answer it fully, my dear,
Were rather a serious task.
One set out a-hunting my lord sings,
In marriage or smoking bird sings,
The business list of a song
To tell what they do at the Springs!

Together the dashing, they drink
The water so sparkling and clear;
Though the flavor is none of the best,
And the odor exceedingly queer,
For the fluid (mingled you know,
With wholesome medicinal things,
So they think, and they drink, and they dine,
At the Springs!

And that's what they do at the Springs!

Then with appetites keen as a knife,
They hasten to breakfast to me;
(The latter precisely at three
The former from seven till nine)
We gobble what is made and rush
When the eloquent dinner-bell rings?
Then they eat and they eat, and they eat—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

Now they stroll in the beautiful walks,
Or loll in the shade of the trees,
Where many a whisper is heard
That never is told by the breeze.
And hands are commingled with hands,
Regardless of congenial things;
And they flirt, and they flirt, and they flirt—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

The drawing-rooms now are ablaze,
And music is whirling away,
Perspiration governs the hour,
And fashion was never so gay!
An arm round a tapering waist—
How closely and fondly it swings;
So they waltz, and they waltz, and they waltz,—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

In short, as it goes in the world—
They eat, and they drink, and they sleep;
They talk, and they walk, and they woo;
They sigh, and they laugh, and they weep;
They read, and they ride, and they dance;
(With other unspeakable things:)
They row, and they play, and they play,—
And that's what they do at the Springs!

VARIETIES.

A fine coat may cover a fool, but fewer conceals one.

Pretty excuse for a wife-beater—The treasure that we value most we hide.

Why had a man better lose his arm than his leg? Because in losing his leg, he loses something 'to boot.'

People who take out, and do not put in, soon find the bottom.

"So far so good," as the boy said when he had finished the first jaw of his mother's preserves.

People become ill by drinking healths. He who drinks the health of others drinks away his own.

"You have a very striking countenance," as the donkey said to the elephant when he bit him over the back with his trunk.

Leap year Dialogue.—"Miss, will you take my arm?"

"Yes, sir, and you too."

"Can't spare but the arm," replied the old bachelor.

"Then," replied she, "I shan't take it, my motto is, go the whole hog or nothing."

A darkey being knocked over in a thunder storm, exclaimed, on regaining a perpendicular position.—Gorry who fire dat gun?

Mr. and Mrs. Brewer of Michigan, have twenty-five children. This is the most extensive brewery in the west.

A PRETTY child looks prettiest when plainly dressed, and a plain one never can be made pretty by "fuss and feathers."

"There, John, that's twice you've come home and forgotten that lard." "La mother, it was so greasy that it slipped my mind."

"Twelve hundred pounds for a mare! can't be," quoth Hagstock. "Oh, that's nothing," says Cyfax; "Richard offered his kingdom for a horse, and no takers."

Artists have adopted different emblems of charity. We wonder none of them ever thought of a piece of India rubber which gives more than any other substance.

We should enjoy our fortune as we do our good health—enjoy it when good, be patient when it is bad, and never apply violent remedies except in an extreme necessity.

An advertisement of cheap shoes and fancy articles in an eastern paper, has the following notabene: N.B. Ladies wishing soon, as they will not last long.

Whoever shall marry some of our match-hunting young women, and place them in domestic establishments, will

[illegible] live to nicy nothings
A local habitation and a name."

SHERLEY says "It is known to but few yet of no small use in the conduct of life that when you fall into a man's conversation, the first thing you should consider is whether he has a greater inclination to hear you, or that you should hear him."

SWIVELLER says that he has been without money so long, that his head aches "ready to split" when he tries to recollect how a half-dollar looks. He says the notion that 'we live in a world of change' is a great fallacy.

At Alton Ill., on the 20th inst, an old man named Stephen Van Dorn set fire to a barn while in a fit of delirium tremens and afterward cut his throat. During the excitement of the fire, Mrs. Nelson, a lady living near by, became so intensely alarmed as actually to die with fright.

A Philander, in travelling on his way to Manchester, New Hampshire, arrived at the fork in the road where there stood sign-board, which read thus; 'Manchester 4 miles.' "Man chased her four miles!" cried Pat. "He the lowly poker I could have caught her meself in half that time!"

A gentleman named Ryan, stopping at the Clarendon Hotel, in Quebec, has been robbed by some person unknown, of a sum of two thousand seven hundred dollars In our opinion, says the Quebec Chronicle he may be safely set down as another victim to the influx of strangers. An investigation was proceeded with yesterday, at the Police court, before the sitting magistrates, but the result has not yet transpired.

It might, perhaps be interesting to some of our readers to know how to keep watermelons for winter use. The way is simply this:—Make a box so as to be perfectly air-tight, then lay the watermelons in, not to touch the box nor touch each other, and fill up with any kind of grain that will pack tight, and they will keep all winter.

FREAK OF NATURE.—Charles Hughes Esquire, of Three Rivers has a cherry tree in his garden which has already yielded a crop of cherries this season and is now covered with blossoms. Time was when such a world be accepted as an omen and predictions of something marrellous in the future would be based upon it; but in the prosaic and sceptical times in which it is our lot to live, we see in it nothing more than a freak of nature.

THE WORLD.

AN INDEPENDENT

Daily, Weekly and semi-Weekly

NEWSPAPER.

IN soliciting for another year a continuance and increase of the favor which in so short a period has given to the World its present rank among American journals—a circulation, business patronage, and influence equalled by other journals only after the effort of many years—we renew to our old and new subscribers the promise that no labor nor expense will be spared to make the World what it aims to be,

The Best Newspaper in America.

In politics, now as ever, the World is independent but never neutral. Its only creed is a national one—of which are the corner stones.

The Union, the Constitution, and the Laws, and Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action

The political events of the past year have notably demonstrated the need of a able, fearless outspoken, first-class

Conservative Journal,

in the commercial metropolis of the country, which shall give constant, bold and vigorous utterance to the conservative sentiments of the best men and the honest masses of the nation. Opposing every enemy to whether armed in rebellion at the South, or insidiously planting the seeds of disunion at the North.

The Union,

Opposing every violation of the Constitution,

the only bond and hope of union, the only ground upon which we can exhort and compel the allegiance of the South.

Opposing every infraction of

The Laws,

in high places or in low, believing that obedience to law is service to God.

Opposing every violation of the

Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action, by whomsoever those violations are committed, whether by the executive in its

Arbitrary, Illegal, and Unjust Arrests,

its refusal of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, its denial of the rights and liberties of citizens, its arrest without warrant, its imprisonment without trial, its abrogation of state and federal laws, its illegal proclamation of an empty emancipation, or whether those violations are committed by the party in power, its orators and its presses, advocating measures which must render the Union for the sake of destroying slavery, and denouncing treason against all their political opponents.

Loyal to the government always, it will give to the administration a hearty and vigorous support whenever and wherever the administration itself is loyal to the bond, the principles, and the purity of the government.

The World will oppose all compromises which would barter away or divide the Union, for which alone the North is waging war; it will oppose peace itself, till the success of the war secures the existence of peace, and will urge the prosecution of the war with an economy which has not hitherto governed its expenditures, and a vigor which the nation during a year and a half has not shown.

The same care will be exercised over the columns of the World to exclude everything which could offend a pure, Christian morality, as all recourse will always be had to the same high principles as well to guard its columns as to guide its judgment of men and events.

All the News

will be found in the columns of the World from the various departments of human activity,

Political, Agricultural, and Commercial, as well as in Literature, Science and Art.

New Publications, Inventions, Discoveries, and Works of Art will receive the same careful and thorough attention.

The latest and most important news from London, Paris, Turin, Rome, Syria, China, California, Japan, Egypt, and South America, our correspondents will send to us.

Our correspondents are attached to the various divisions of the army; will accompany them wherever they go, and by the free use of the telegraph and the mails, present in the columns of the World

A Complete History of the War,

from day to day, and from month to month.

In the Weekly and Semi-Weekly editions of the World, especially, large space will be given to

Agriculture,

and to all departments of

Manufacturing and Mechanical Industry.

The Weekly World will contain an adjustable serial story during the current year

THE DAILY WORLD.

The Daily World is the most complete Commercial and News Paper published in America. Besides as full telegraph news, war correspondence, and foreign news, &c., as any two cent daily, it furnishes a much fuller commercial news. Its Ship News, Produce, and Cattle Market reports, Foreign and Domestic Importations, Stock Lists, and Commercial news, no business man can do without.

TERMS (INVARIABLE IN ADVANCE):

One copy for one year, $8.
Four copies for one year, $30.
For a club of ten copies an extra copy will be sent for one year.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY WORLD.

The Semi-Weekly World is a large quarto sheet, same size as the daily, containing all its news, correspondence, miscellany and editorials, its commercial and market news, and entertaining selections and miscellaneous reading. Its cattle market and provision reports make it highly valuable to every farmer.

EMPLOYMENT.

THE Undersigned has, for several years past, been engaged in a business, which has yielded him at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum, and is now willing to teach it to others. The business is of a highly useful and general character, adapted both to cities and villages, and one that any person of ordinary capacity, young or old, male or female, can acquire with a few hours' practice, and by which they can secure a very handsome income. Several young ladies who have received instructions from me, both in New York State and Pennsylvania, are earning upwards of $15 per week by it, and there is no reason why any one else cannot do the same. Invalids, even, can do well by it, as it is no peddling affair, but a business that is perfectly respectable. Gentleman and ladies of leisure who would like to learn the business for their own amusement or pleasure, will find the practice of it a pleasant pastime, and see that they will take great interest in. On receipt of $1, I will send printed instruct ions by which any person can readily acquire the art, and these instructions will also contain every particular relative to the carrying it on so that it will be highly profitable. The purchaser of the "printed instructions" will also be authorized to teach it to others, and I have sometimes received as high as $200, for teaching it personally to a single individual. I would state further that $3.50 or $4 will buy everything that is necessary to commence the business with, and the articles can be got almost anywhere, in city or country, or if preferred, I can furnish them. Poetry.

THE HEART'S GUESTS.

When age has cast its shadows,
O'er life's declining way,
When evening twilight gathers
Round our retiring day,
Then shall we sit and ponder
On the dim past shadowy past,
In the heart's chamber framed,
The guests will gather fast.

Guests that in youth we cherished
Shall come to us once more,
And we shall hold communion
As in the days before.
They may be dark and sombre,
They may be bright and fair,
But the heart will have its chamber,
The guests will gather there.

How shall it be my sister,
Who shall be our heart's guests?
How shall it be my brothers,
When life's shadow on us rests?
Shall we not 'mid the silence,
Hear voices, sweet and low,
Speak the old familiar language,
The words of long ago?

Shall we not see dear faces
Sweet smiling as of old,
Till the mist of that lone chamber
Are sunset clouds of gold?
When age has cast its shadows,
O'er life's declining way,
And evening twilight gathers
Round our retiring day.

Miscellaneous.

BUY YOUR OWN CHERRIES!

BY J. W. KIRTON.

Sunday was spent in John's usual manner; in the morning he went out for a walk, and after dinner stayed at home to read the paper; when the shade of evening gathered around, he strolled out and did not return till after 10 o'clock. (How many thus waste God's holy day through the cursed drink!) This being a regular thing with him, no notice was taken of it, yet Mary thought John quiet and dull, and once asked him kindly whether he was well, but he said he was all right, so she did not venture to question him again. All the next week passed off at home without any perceptible change; for John, not liking to return home sooner than usual, went on the Monday night to a Temperance Meeting, and was so much interested, that when another meeting was announced not far from there next evening he decided to go, and from what the speakers said of the good it had done them, he signed the pledge.

On the Saturday when the bell rang and John went to the office for his wages he felt a thrill of joy run through his hand after receiving them, retired to a quiet corner of the workshop, and looking at the sovereign and a-half which lay in his hand, said, "It is many a long day since I could say that ye both belonged to me; and don't part with ye unless I get plenty out of ye;" and clasping his hand and putting it and its contents into his pocket, you might have heard him say, 'I'll buy my own cherries, that I will.'

Mary was much pleased to see him return even sooner than the week before (for reasons known to our readers), and soon placed the tea before him, and while bustling about the room, and doing her best to keep the children quiet, she felt almost inclined to say how pleased she was, but checked herself, lest he might when giving her the money, stop some for the last week's mistake.

When he had nearly finished his meal, he said 'Here, Mary, you'll be wanting to go a-marketing, directly I suppose, there's the money, throwing it into her lap.

Her heart was ready to sink when she felt the money in her hand. 'Ah,' she thought, 'he has soon stopped the overplus of last week;' but, thinking by the light of the fire, it looked rather yellow, she went to the window (for it was a narrow court in which they lived, where the daylight never fairly entered the room except by accident or when a streak of sunlight shot its ray down among them).—'Can it be possible?' she thought, 'a sovereign and a-half!' and an utterance of surprise escaped from her, as she said almost in a whisper, 'Is all this for me, John?'

'Yes,' said John, 'and I hope you'll spend it well.'

'I hope,' said Mary trembling, 'you haven't done anything wrong to get so much, John.'

'No my lass,' said John, while his heart trembled with emotion, 'I have done wrong long enough, and I'm going to do right for the future.'

'But,' said Mary,—

'Never mind now,' said John, 'get your bonnet and shawl, and let us both go to market.'

Mary did not need a second order to get ready, all the while wondering how it was to be accounted for; resolving however while she was tying her strings, that she would quietly wait until John thought proper to give her an explanation; so after bidding Sally and Tommy take care of the other children and the house, they went on their way. John then briefly told her the decision he had come to, and hoped she would forgive him for the past, and help him to do better for the time to come; to all of which Mary listened with trembling yet joyful interest. Their conversation was soon interrupted by their approaching the first place they should call at, which was the butcher's; who when he saw them coming together, ceased crying 'What will you buy?' for thought he, they won't want much, a small joint that everybody else leaves, or some piece in yonder corner at 4d. a lb., so he continued looking at his stock of meat with his back towards John and Mary.

He was soon aroused, however, by hearing John's voice 'I say, guvenor, what's this leg of mutton a pound?' and looking round he saw John in the act of handling a piece of meat of that description.

'The idea of your asking such a question!' thought the butcher; but in a moment he said, 'Eight-pence!'

'Take it down and see what it weighs,' said John.

'Yes,' said the butcher, thinking to himself, 'I'll weigh it, and that will be enough for you, I know.'

'It weighs just 8 lbs. cold cuttee 2 shillings and 6d.' Now you see dear, in those days.

'I'll have it,' says John.

'Yes,' thinks the butcher, 'when you've paid for it.'

'Here Mary,' said John, 'give him the money.'

So Mary pushed her finger inside her old glove, and brought out the sovereign, and laid it on the butcher's block so carefully, as if she was afraid of rubbing the gold dust off.

The butcher watched every movement, thinking that all this care was to be regarded as a sign of deception, and that the money was bad; so taking it up quickly, he bounced it hard upon the block to test its quality, but when its ring assured him that all was right, in a moment his face changed its expression and his voice its tone, while he said with great politeness;—

'Can I send it home for you, sir? and is there any other article, beef, pork, &c.,' while the change rested between his fingers.

'No,' said John, feeling rather vexed, 'nothing else to-night.'

'Thank you sir—let me see, you live at No 20, Bread Street, don't you?'

'Yes,' said John, and upon Mary taking up the change, they passed out from the shop.

It is not necessary for us to follow them round to the other places; it is only right to say each shopkeeper was surprised and pleased to receive larger orders and more money, and as a matter of course, showed an extra amount of politeness.

Meanwhile their children at home had their talk about the matter.

"How funny,' said Tommy, 'to see father and mother go out to market to-gether!'

'Yes,' said Sally, isn't it?'

'I wonder,' said Tommy, 'whether anybody that father knows has died and left him some money?' And with similar childlike talk they were engaged when a sharp rap came at the door and disturbed them.

Sally went to the door, and there stood a butcher boy with a basket and a leg of mutton in it.

'Does Mister Lewis live here?' said the boy.

'No,' said Sally, 'there is no one of that name living here?'

'It's strange,' said the boy!' I was told this was the house, isn't this No. 20?'

'Yes,' said Sally, "this is No. 20, but no one of that name lives here.'

'Well, who does live here?' said the boy.

'My father, and mother, and us, said Sally.

'And what's your father's name?' said the boy.

'They call him Jack Lewis,' said Sally.

'Well, that's the same man, Mister and Jack's all the same,' said the boy, 'and here's a leg of mutton for him.'

'Oh I'm sure you're wrong,' said Sally, we never have such things as them come to our house.

'But I tell you it's all right,' said the boy, 'and it's paid for.'

'Well if it's paid for, I'll take it in,' but I am sure you'll have to come and fetch it back again,' said Sally.

'Oh it will be all right,' said the boy, and away he went.

'My word,' said Tommy, 'isn't it a whopper? only fancy if this was our's wouldn't we have a tuck in for dinner?' And the little fellow danced about the room for joy—and while he was cutting his capers (not for the mutton sauce) in this manner, another knock was heard at the door.

'Here he comes,' said Tommy. But on opening the door a baker's boy presented himself with three large loaves.

'Does Mr. Lewis live here?' said the boy.

'Well,' said Sally, thinking it strange, 'my father's called Jack Lewis, if that's him.'

'All right, here's these loaves for him.'

'Are they paid for?' said Sally.

'Yes,' said the boy, 'some make haste.'

'Well, I'll take em' in, being as how they are paid for, but we never have such big loaves as them, and I am sure you'll have to fetch 'em back again, there's some mistake somewhere.'

'There, that's all fudge,' said the boy and off he went.

'My word,' said Tommy, 'ain't them buns? see sister, they are new, and well baked too, aint they? only fancy if they was ours, wouldn't we make a hole in them now?'

And again he started off with a dance and a shout, in the midst of which another rap at the door was heard.

'Here they are,' he said, 'I'll bring them to the door.'

But upon the door being opened there was a lad with parcels of tea, sugar, coffee, &c.—and the same question was asked. But Sally by this time had decided to take in all that was paid for, at the same time telling each one, 'They mustn't be surprised if they had to fetch them back again.'

The greengrocer sent potatoes and cabbages; the butterman, eggs, bacon, and butter, and other articles from different shops arrived, until the table began to be quite full.

'I do wish father and mother would come home,' said Sally; suppose a policeman was to come and find all these things here, what could we do?'

'I wonder,' said Tommy, 'whether father's going to keep a shop?'

'Don't be silly, Tommy; it would make you still, I know, if we were all to go to prison,' said Sally.

In the midst of this dialogue, much to the joy of the children father and mother returned, and soon told them that the things on the table were for the coming week, and that all of them would have a share if they were good; and giving them a piece of the new loaf and a bit of cheese, off they were packed to bed and told to be quiet; but quietness was out of the question, no sooner were they upstairs than they began to talk of the morrow's feasting, and their tongues made such a noise that it awoke the other children, and then Tommy had to tell them what downstairs there was a whopping leg of mutton, and such big loaves, and lots of other things.

Next afternoon, while all were seated around the table mother brought out a plate of rosy ripe cherries, was it any wonder when the children set up a shout of joy, that Mary's heart was too full to contain its emotion? and while the children were making earrings of the cherries, she drew close to John, and kissing him quietly, the tears trickling down her cheeks the meanwhile, she whispered in his ear, 'We may be happy yet.'

And so it was, for in a short time John found that he could buy clothes for his children, and then for himself and wife; and somehow it began to be whispered that he was getting proud, for he moved into a better neighborhood where he only had to pay the same rent nevertheless. Meantime the master finding him more than ever attentive to his work, appointed him as foreman at an advanced rate of wages; and somehow John used to say, that 'He found it vastly more pleasant to receive £2 10s. a-week for looking after men doing the work, than 30s. for doing it.' And step by step he arose, until he became a master himself; and instead of working he had men to look after it and do it for him. He has built a nice row of houses, from which he can receive sufficient to keep him without work the remainder of his days. His son Tommy is now practising as a physician with a good connection; and the rest of the children have been well educated; and, added to all this, he and his wife are hearty supporters of the 'Grand Alliance,' and the 'Temperance Society,' and, by the blessing of God, have become consistent members of a Christian church.

Worthy men, the moral is soon told:—It is not how much money a-week you earn, but what you do with it when you get it. How many a home comfort in the shape of carpets, sofas, chairs, books, &c., are lost, by the simple fact that the money goes in the wrong way. If you learn nothing else by this sketch, you may learn this, that if you are to have a 'Home, sweet Home,' you must 'Buy your own Cherries!'—British Workman.

Terrible Slaughter at Fort Wagner.

(From the Independent.)

For two hours the fort was occupied by men who literally fought for the ground they stood upon—carried and occupied first by one brigade under General Strong which when it was forced at last to yield left every officer in it behind, either dead or wounded above a major—carried and occupied again by another brigade under acting General Putnam, after the first had been shattered and cut to pieces, and this, in its turn, to be repulsed with great slaughter, in lack of support with which a reserved force should have succored it. The steady march along the beach under the direct fire from the point of attack, and the infilading fire of other forts; the dash through ditch and over parapet right into the stronghold of the enemy, to fight there—first one brigade and then the other—for two long hours, are noble deeds of heroism. But why were they unavailing? Why do the lives of these thousand men count only for loss?

No, not all for loss, though the gain is one which they did not reckon upon, and perhaps do not value, who had the direction of these events. The post of honor in that first splendid charge was given to the 54th Massachusetts Regiment of colored men, under Col. Robert G. Shaw. Veteran regiments followed it, but the black men, just from a march of 13 miles—13 miles, remember, of a South Carolina midsummer—led the assault. It is meant as an acknowledgment of the soldierly qualities of the black man, that wherever there is the work of a forlorn hope to be done, as at Fort Hudson and Fort Wagner, he, though only a few weeks in the ranks, is preferred over the veteran white soldier? We do not care to ask if there is any other motive; it is enough that the black man justifies any confidence, even to rashness, in his courage and devotion, and proves beyond all cavil his possession of the fighting faculty, putting thereby all villifiers to shame however much they may rejoice in his slaughter.

The 54th Massachusetts was led by a commander whose gentle and manly qualities, whose kind and considerate treatment of his men, had won their love and enthusiastic personal devotion, while his calm and cheerful courage was a constant example which they would have been ashamed not to imitate. He waived them forward from the parapet when he fell, but they fought till three hundred of their comrades lay beside and around him, and only a boy lieutenant was left of all their officers to lead them out of a fight that was hopeless. The general—Stevenson—who was in command of the reserve that should have come to their rescue, and made Fort Wagner our own, was arrested some months ago—just before he was made a Brigadier, to the discredit of the U. S. Senate—for declaring that he would rather be defeated than victorious with black soldiers. No general orders will report that Gen. Stevenson was defeated, or that black men were victorious at Fort Wagner; but there is a verdict higher and more just than official reports, and this will pass judgment on the character of the negro soldier, and the spirit of the words of the white copperhead colonel. The representative facts of this Boston black regiment, and this Boston white general, thus face to face, in word and in action are among the significations with which the times abound, and which wise men heed.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church.

The published Minutes of the recent annual Conference of this large and influential section of the Christian Church, represent it to be in a highly flourishing condition. Evidently during the past year its interests in all departments have been well sustained. Its Clergy who in point of numerical strength and Evangelical labors stand ranking the foremost of the Protestant Churches of Canada, numbering, according to present returns, over 500 Ministers and Preachers; who are distributed over 36 Districts comprising 312 Circuits and Missions, and comprising a Church membership of 56,338, of the laity, which has not only kept good its numbers of the preceding year, by filling up the vacancies necessarily occurring from removals, expulsions and deaths, but also received a net increase of 1,939, 1,169 are local Preachers and exhorters, whose gratuitous services, under the direction of the Ministers in charge, greatly subserve the interest of the general work. Of the 2,997 preaching places at which Sabbath services have been statedly maintained, 809 are Churches which, generally speaking, are held in Trust for the Connection under Mr. Wesley's Model Deed. All these places of worship the average attendance, irrespective of young children, has been 179,080 persons. This number, of course, is only an approximation, and, doubtless much below the true figure. From the Baptismal Registry we also learn that the subjects of that rite have numbered 7,000 for the same period. The number of Sabbath Schools, the Report of which is most encouraging, is 581, with 5,694 Teachers, 38,752 scholars, and the Books in their Libraries collectively amount to 57,274 volumes. In Finances the figures are equally cheering. Exclusive of funds raised for local improvements and general educational interests, and also those in behalf of Missionary operations, together with Minister's salaries, &c., &c., the money raised for general connexional purposes are the following, viz.:—for Superannuated Ministers, $7,283 34; for contingencies, $12,787 78; for the relief of embarrassed churches, $1,583 23; for the education of young Ministers, $1,264 52; and for Minister's children, [illegible] solely by the membership, $1[illegible]78. The Missionary contributions for the year which will be reported separately, may be fixed at the lowest calculation at £[illegible],000.

A Story of Heroism.

Let me give you a little incident, to illustrate the capability of the African race for heroic action. Last January a large ship, a transport in the Banks expedition, went ashore on a small desolate Island—one of the Little Bahama group. Providentially all hands were saved; and several days were spent in securing food from the wreck, until a heavy easterly blow interrupted the work. The day after this blow set in, it appeared that one of our men had by some chance been left on board the wreck. His position was one of great peril, and our anxiety for him soon became intense. For three days we watched him with our glasses, looking out from the jagged shore over four miles of as furious surf as is ever seen in that region of shipwrecks. No boat could live through it.

On the fourth day we were startled to observe that during the night the ship had lost her mainmast, turned end for end, and settled nearly at the water's edge. But the man in tell seen clinging to the wreck. Another night like this will sweep him into the boiling surge. Cannot something be done to save him? It is a desperate venture, but it is resolved to try.

Soon our eyes are turned from the lone man on the wreck to a more exciting spectacle. Five Bahama wreckers—men of whom it is hardly a figure of speech to say that they were born among the breakers—have taken our life-boat and started for the wreck. The storm has already abated as if to encourage the attempt; but the surf is still fearful and the chances are against success. The devoted little band, however, push boldly out, and struggle through the foaming breakers toward the wreck. The minutes seem hours to us, as we watch their progress. Now the boat is balanced on the crest of a wave; now she plunges headlong in the yawning abyss beyond it. 'She is lost!' 'No, there she is;' and again she rears and plunges, and our hearts leap as if tossed by the same billows.

So these brave men have battled their way for more than three miles. The object of their devotion lies but half a mile beyond them, and the sight of him gives them new courage. But the waves are mightier than they. A breaker of unusual size rushes furiously toward them. At first it comes like the roof of a house; then like an upright wall; now it overhangs them like a tower of Pisa. An other moment, and the oars are buried from the hands of the men, the men are buried from the boat, and the boat is buried under the frothy ruins of that watery tower.

Fifteen minutes later by some miracle of nautical skill, the boat was right side up, and the men were in the boat. Two oars were recovered, and with these they rowed back to tell us that no human power could reach the wreck that day.

We crowded to the shore to greet these hardy men and praise their disinterested heroism; and behold, four of the five heroes were very black negroes—black, indeed, but comely, for the heroic impulses by which they were animated seemed to invest those sable features with unwonted dignity and favor.

Out of fifty black and one hundred white wreckers, one white and four black men had volunteered in the perilous enterprise.—N. Y. Independent.

JAIL JOTTINGS.—500 prisoners were brought to the City Jail during last month, being a greater number than ever before admitted within a similar period. Yesterday 300 rations were served out, being more than upon any previous day.—Wednesday, Aug. 7.

AN OLD ENGLISH TREE.—An ash-tree has been cut down at Stowey, Somerset, which is said to have been the largest standing in England. The stock measured 40 feet long and eighteen feet five inches in circumference under the bark.

The Contemplated Invasion of this State.

The New Albany Ledger of Saturday says:—

We this morning conversed with a highly intelligent gentleman, a resident of Knoxville, East Tennessee, who gave us some important information in regard to anticipated movements of the rebels during the approaching autumn months.

He states that he has had many opportunities to learn the plans of the Rebels, and that he is otherwise, from positive information, but they design invading Kentucky in large force, as soon as the corn shall have become dry enough to grind into meal, and for feeding purposes. The plan for this invasion, he is satisfied, is fully matured, and Louisville is the main point aimed at. Our informant says that the Rebels are confident of their ability, when Rosecrans shall commence his movement into Georgia, to easily occupy the portion of Kentucky west of Kentucky river, as they are promised assistance from sympathizers, and do not doubt that it will be afforded.

Condition of Southern Railroads.

A practical machinist and locomotive engineer, formerly employed on the Bellefontaine railway, and who has, for the last two years, been employed in the South, having escaped through the Rebel lines at the capture of Jackson, Miss., and has reached Cleveland, Ohio. The Cleveland Herald says he is a man entitled to perfect confidence and entirely able to speak of the state of the railway lines in the South. He says that the rolling stock on the Southern railroads is in wretched condition, and there are neither mechanics, shops, nor suitable tools to repair the machinery. The engines and cars have been kept on the move constantly, and a train cannot now, with safety, make over four miles an hour on most of the tracks. There were seven locomotives captured at Jackson, but only two were fit to haul a train of five cars. The tracks, too, are in a sad plight; the sidings have been taken up to patch out the main tracks, and trains are compelled switch off on timbers at the turnouts. There is no way to remedy these things; there is no iron, there are few mechanics competent to repair the machinery; there are no suitable tools, even were there men to handle them; and the trouble is daily becoming more serious.

Sad Scenes in Tennessee.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writing from Tullahoma, Tenn., July 16, says:

There is not a family between Tullahoma and Winchester, near the road, that is not totally destitute of provisions. Laid under contribution by both armies, the people have been left scarcely a single pound of provender, and the day I passed in return I found barefooted women, gray-headed men and ragged children plodding forward to Winchester after something to eat.

I was accosted by an old gentleman, as I passed a neat little log-cabin at the foot of the hills, where the road entered a small valley traversed by a clear stream of mountain water, and asked whether he could find work enough at the North to support his family.

I asked him his sentiments. He replied that, at both elections in Tennessee, he voted against secession; that since then, he had contributed nothing voluntarily to the Rebel cause, but that both armies had levied on his stock of provender, until his family were left destitute. He had nothing left but a crop of growing corn, and that might, before the winter set in, be gathered by the army foraging parties. The case was a pitiable one, but there were hundreds of others equally so. The truth of the matter is, that the coming winter will witness sufferings by hunger equaled only by those of the Irish in the rebellion of '98. Food enough cannot be found in this country to subsist the people during the coming winter.

A splendid residence on the left, as we entered the place, was discovered dismantled and disordered. The most elegant furniture, carpets, pictures and books were strewn about the yard, broken and torn and soiled. Guards were sent forward to protect the town and private property. Gen. Jeff. C. Davis approved of the course, and issued the most stringent orders against similar excesses.

SKEDADDLERS.—On Friday afternoon last the steamer Bay State touched at Brockville, from Ogdensburg, having on board some sixty or seventy drafted and enlisted men for the American army, on their route westward. As soon as the vessel touched the wharf one of the intended soldiers jumped upon the wharf and exclaimed, "Abe Lincoln may———. I care nothing for him now." Some of the non-commissioned officers in charge did not relish this style of leave-taking, consequently followed the skedaddler, and did their best to get him to return to his duty. This he resolutely refused to do when he was knocked down by a corporal or sergeant, and then seized for the purpose of being carried on board the steamer. This summary process, it appears, did not meet the approbation of several roughs around the wharf, who immediately fell foul of the American officers, and a regular free fight ensued. Several blows were dealt, and at last the Americans were glad to take refuge on the propeller, minus the man knocked down, and also two others. The Steamer had to leave without them.—Brockville Recorder.

Epitome of News.

Among the sufferers by the late mob in New York was Mr. Van Meter's mission school. The windows were broken and Mr. Van Meter's life was threatened. He is now at Saratoga for health and recreation, and will open his establishment again in September.

A New Orleans letter says: On Saturday, the 4th, Gen. Emory issued a call for three or four regiments of men to serve for sixty days in the defence of the city. In just three days four full negro regiments were raised, organized, clothed, armed and equipped.'

THE BLOCKADE-RUNNER EAGLE.—A VALUABLE PRIZE.—A Port Royal letter, 31st ult., to the Baltimore American, says:

The great blockade-running steamer Eagle was brought in yesterday as a prize from the east of Florida, having been captured near the Hole-in-the-Wall after an exciting chase, during which fifteen shots were fired at her, three of which hit her. She is about one hundred and sixty feet in length, with a breadth of beam not over twenty-five feet; sits very low in the water and has a decidedly rakish appearance. She was evidently built for the trade, and is said to have made a dozen successful trips from Charleston to Nassau and back. She was the boast and toast of the trade, and our blockaders were taunted with her nimbleness. Her cargo consists of salt and assorted goods.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20TH, 1863.

THE SPEECH.

In His Excellency's Speech there is nothing new or startling. It appears pretty much the same as that of last Session.

The Militia Bill occupies a prominent position in the Speech. The subject, no doubt, has been much meditated upon and thought over by Lord Monck since the last Session. He indirectly eulogises the present Administration for what has already been done, and bears testimony to the marked success of the Volunteer movement. The Governor, we think, is right in earnestly and strongly calling the attention of the Legislature to the defences of the Province. It is a subject in which he himself feels a deep interest; it is one in which every true and loyal Canadian should be interested. We say this not because we are disposed to place implicit credence in wild, improbable reports which certain politicians, for reasons of their own, have been for some time back so industriously engaged in setting on foot, and which, as far as one can judge, have but very little foundation to rest upon; but because we believe it is the duty of every Government to provide and to be prepared for any contingencies or emergencies of which however improbable in themselves, there may be the remotest possibility of arising. And from the present distracted condition of the United States, to say nothing of the complications to which this state of things may yet lead, it is impossible to imagine the role Canada may be called upon to play.

The Government is fully impressed with the necessity of action and we think what it has done may be considered as an earnest of what it will do. We are sure that it will do everything that is consistent with economy and the present miserable state of the finances to enable the Province to protect itself from the attacks of any who may attempt to invade it or trample upon its liberties. At the same time the wild statements, and assertions, and calculations of the Opposition must be taken cum grano salis, as they will stick at nothing to oust the present Administration, and to reinstate themselves in power. This, it is to be hoped, for the sake of the country, they will never be able to do. Their eight years of misrule, reckless extravagance, and utter contempt of all constitutional restraints is one of the blackest periods of Canadian History. They are dead, however; peace to their manes.

The Government intends introducing a Bill for the equitable adjustment of the relations between Debtor and Creditor, and to afford relief to insolvent debtors. A Bankrupt Law has long been needed in the Province, and there would have been one before this but for the violent stoppage of public business by the Opposition last Session. We hope the Bill will be cheap and effective in its operations, and, therefore, altogether unlike that introduced by the Cartier-McDonald Ministry which, from its unwieldiness and expensiveness, had to be dropped from want of support.

The Financial condition of the Province is touched upon by his Excellency. Well it may; it is most deplorable. To grapple with the huge debt bequeathed by the late Ministry is to undertake a great task. It is worse than any of the twelve labors of Hercules—more difficult than the cleansing of the Augean stable. We hope, however that the attempt to equalize Expenditure and Income and decrease the present enormous debt—will prove successful. If it does, the Ministry will establish for itself a stronger claim upon the gratitude and support of the people than any Ministry that has preceded it. We must, however, give it a chance, and not expect wonders at once. It takes time to cure desperate disease. The surgeons knife must be applied fearlessly and vigorously in lopping off all useless and superfluous expenditure. We believe it will.

The Speech concludes by noticing a proposition emanating from the Colonial Office to the Canadian Government, to join in an annual subsidy for the establishment of a Telegraph and transit route across the Continent. This is an important matter; and, we have no doubt, will receive the attention at the hands of the Government its present and prospective importance may merit.

SPEAKER.

All our readers, no doubt, are aware before this, that the Hon. Lewis Wallbridge has been elected Speaker of the Lower House. The Hon. George Brown was the first nominee of the Upper Canada Reform party; but he did not wish the office—and for various reasons declined. Mr. Wallbridge then became the Ministerial candidate, and was elected by a majority of 8. This, however, does not prove that the present Ministry will have only a majority of that number in the House. Many based their opposition to Mr. Wallbridge upon personal grounds, and upon the fact that he was a member of the Government. These say they would have voted for Mr. Brown or Mr. Foley, &c. This proves that their sympathies were not very much with the disconsolate leaders of the Opposition party. In fact, John A. and George E. have but a gloomy prospect before them of ever getting the reins of power in their hands, or their hands again into the public chest. Poor fellows! no wonder they feel bad, after all their late boastings and proclamations to Upper Canada! They are not quite dead yet, by a long spell, while hope lives there is life, and strap—

The truth is, that the Opposition and their supporters of Constitutional rights and privileges. What a change! When in power, what regard to constitutional principles, considerations their broadest sense, did the McDonald-Cartier, or the Cartier-McDonald Ministry ever manifest? When? in what? Not surely in the Double Shuffle game which stands upon the records of our Legislature as one of the meanest acts that the lowest political tricksters could be guilty of. No!, certainly, in retaining as Solicitor-General, an individual who had been rejected by the people at the polls, time after time, because of the bad company he kept. Not, assuredly, in giving away $100,000 to the Municipal Council of Montreal, without the sanction or even the knowledge of the Legislature, because it was thought that thereby party ends and purposes would be advanced! Nor, surely in its disgraceful complicity with the Zimmerman business! In which of these above instances did the Cartier-McDonald Ministry regulate its conduct by constitutional usage or principles? Which received the sanction of a precedent? Which? And these are but a few of the many instances in which these constitutional restraints that, by prescription or legislative authority, have been placed upon those in power to keep them from doing what is illegal or injurious to the public weal, were cast off and utterly disregarded by those who now in abusive recriminatory tirades, and in the loud language of the bully, clamor for the observance of constitutional usage. They affirm it is unconstitutional that the Ministry should select one of its own members for the Chair, and that there is no precedent for for the same. This is mere assertion. It wants proof to establish its truthfulness; but no proof can be vouchsafed. There are precedents; but, for arguments sake, suppose that no precedent for the course of the Ministry exists, what then? What harm has been done? A precedent, if wrong, can at legalise and make right what is wrong. Nor ought that which is right absolutely, or even which is right relatively, inasmuch as it is not detrimental to public interests, and is required by existent exigencies to be condemned and denounced, and that simply from the want of a precedent. Precedents must be created; but if the principle upon which the Opposition acted in the election of Speaker were recognised and carried out, this would never be done.

Every new reform that the progressive spirit of the age demands; every new right accorded to the people; every improvement in the various relations of the country, if a little out of the beaten course of things, might possibly find cavillers to object to it on the very same grounds that the Opposition have objected to the election of Speaker; but should the reform on this account not be effected, the right witheld, and the improvement not made? What injury can possibly be inflicted upon the people or their rights, or what stab to the Constitution, by electing a minister to be Speaker? The Speakership is an office belonging, in a peculiar manner, to the Legislature. The elevation to the Chair does not necessitate a re-election of the successful candidate. It would be quite another thing, if the Speaker could be made a minister without appealing to the people. But this cannot be done. We think, therefore, that the House, as it is their business, and one which does not affect the general concerns of the Province, should be allowed to be competent judges of a candidate's qualifications,—intellectual and otherwise—for the Chair as well as his legal eligibility therefor. The Legislature is the supreme authority in such a matter, and we should bow to its judicial decision.

But there are precedents. In 1581, Sir John Popham the Solicitor-General, was elected Speaker. So Sir Edward Coke, a few years after. In 1801, Sir John Mitford, Attorney-General, was elected Speaker, and the resignation of his office was conditional on his election to the Chair.

We think it will be found that the conduct of the Opposition is factious in the extreme, and altogether unworthy of their characters as Legislators. Like drowning men, they are ready to catch at straws.

MR. CONGER.

We are glad to see that our representative Mr. CONGER, has honorably redeemed his pledge of offering no factious opposition to the present Ministry. In the vote for the Speaker, he was on the right side. We believe that MR. CONGER will be found ready and willing to co-operate and support the Government in every measure, which he considers to be conducive to the interests of the Province. Let MR. CONGER only pursue the independent course which we know he has chalked out for himself, and he may rest assured of the sympathy and support of all his old friends and not a few new ones besides—the petty influence and efforts of the viper of the Review to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE Review is as inconsistent as ever! It pretends to be Conservative, when by its own showing it is an ultra-radical. In its issue of last week is to be found this profound statement:—

"Everyone knows that your thoroughpaced radical is economical of nothing but the truth."

This morceau is rather of the Delphian oracle kind; it may mean nothing or something. We take it, however, a la Review. Mark the syllogism. The Review (as every respectable person will admit) is a stranger to truth. A thorough-paced radical (according to the Review) is a stranger to truth; therefore the Review is a thorough-paced radical.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, August 17th, 1863.

The Council met. Present: His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs Towle, Fry, Nicholls, Dixon, Burnham, Landy, Ryan, Clarke, Nicholls and Carlile.

The minutes of former meeting were read and on a vote of the Council being taken thereon, were confirmed.

A communication from the Attorney General West's office, to the Mayor, stating that unless the amount due the Municipal Loan Fund for 1862, be paid by the 1st of October next, proceedings will be taken the enforce to payment, was read and referred to the Finance committee.

A communication was also read from the Secretary of the Board of School Trustees, informing the Council of the amount required for the School for the current year, was referred to the Finance committee.

R. Smith informed the Council, that he was unable to proceed with laying the side-walks for the want of plank.

A petition from John Sullivan, asking compensation for gravel which he laid on Hunter Street, was read and received.

A report from the Special Committee, on the plans for an Engine House and Lock-up, was submitted, received and adopted.

The Finance Committee recommended the payment of a number of accounts, amounting to $48 67; the account of T. Mahoney for pails given at a fire, which the committee considered he had no just claim, therefore could not recommend the payment.

The names of Messrs. Clurton and Toole were added to the Committee for superintending the improvements in the old burying ground.

On motion of Mr. Toole and seconded by Mr. Fry, that the Street and Bridge Committee be instructed to have Aylmer Street properly graded from Charlotte Street to the Southern Boundary of the Town, and also to have Murray Street from Delaney's blacksmith shop to Bethune Street, properly graded and water tabled, and also to have a proper Bridge built over the branch of the Creek running through in that vicinity.

Moved by Mr. Burnham and seconded by Mr. Ryan, that Messrs. Landy, Ryan and Clurton, be a special committee, to examine the state of the drain where it crosses the Road at F. Elsworth's, Aylmer Street, with Spalding's Bay, and that they have power to cause to be done, what may be necessary to construct a culvert over the said drain on Aylmer Street.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Landy and seconded by Mr. Burnham, that the Street and Bridge committee, have a shaft put in at the crossing in front of Mr. Caisse's, to keep the surface water from destroying the new tank. —Carried.

A By-law for grading and excavating Murray Street, was read a second and third time, asp passed, and ordered to be signed and sealed.

Moved by Mr. Nicholls and seconded by Mr. Fry, that no money be advanced for any purpose under the Consolidation Act unless by the sanction of a majority of the Council.—Lost.

Moved by Mr. Landy and seconded by Mr. Fry, that Robert White and others, on Aylmer Street, be allowed to take as many of the old plank that are taken up from the side walks that are relaid, as will lay a side walk on Aylmer Street, at their own expense.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Clurton and seconded by Mr. Ryan, that the Mayor and the Surveyors appointed to lay out the lands at the South end of the Town, be requested, and are hereby empowered to name the new Streets.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned for one week.

WAR WITH ENGLAND.

The N. Y. Times in a late article, ridicules and makes merry over the Washington News, to which much semi-official importance is attached, respecting war with England. After exposing the absurdity of the thing, the Times thus winds up:—

"It is not in our Constitution nor in the practice of our Government for any of Executive officer or officers, of even the highest rank, to proclaim war against Foreign Powers. Congress has been supposed to have the decision of the grave question of peace and war; and as Congress is not in session at present in Washington, it might seem strange that an evening paper there should "semi-officially" promulge what Congress is likely to do in the matters at issue between the American people and the Governments of England and France. But it is precisely because we do not "see" the vast amount of "semi-official importance" attached to this newspaper editorial in Washington that we ought, perhaps, to tremble for the peace of the world."

Retrenchment.

The ministry deserves the thanks of the Country if for nothing else, at least for the efforts it is making to lop off all superfluous expenditure. Already much has been done and the good working is going on. The Cartier-Macdonald ministry, to extend its influence, and to pay its supporters, created places of every kind and grade. The greedy hangers on got these, and in many instances all they had to do was—to draw the salaries. Well the axe has been laid at the foot of the tree—and while the country rejoices—the "unfortunates" howl and moan piteously over the wrongs and the hardheartedness of the Ministry. The howl will be louder and more piteous before the Ministry get through. There must be retrenchment.

SCHOOL EXAMINATION AT LAKEFIELD.—The School at Lakefield taught by Mr. Ray was examined in presence of quite a number of visitors, on Friday last. The various classes in Reading, Spelling, Geography, Grammar and Arithmetic (written and mental) acquitted themselves most creditably. Prizes were awarded to the most deserving. At the conclusion, addresses were delivered by Mr. Wm. Nicholls, Mr. H. Edmison and the Rev. Koyl, who announced his intention of giving two prizes at the next examination.

CRICKET.

Another Practice Match between the Civilians and Volunteers was played on Tuesday, which resulted in favor of the latter by 23 runs, making the second match in their favor, against three won by the Civilians this season. The following is the score:—

FALL IMPORTATIONS.

We solicit attention to the new Autumn Goods, now opening at MR. CLURTON'S Establishment in this Town. His Stock is large and complete, including every variety of Fancy and Staple Dry Goods. It is his intention to make continual additions to the stock during the Fall, so that his customers may be able to obtain, in Peterborough, the new designs and styles as they appear in the Markets. His goods are bought on favorable terms, and he can offer inducements to intending purchasers.

We recommend our friends to try his fresh Teas, they are good and cheap. We need say nothing about his Millinery department, as it is already so well known for choice and beautiful articles in that line.

WE Would draw the attention of our readers, to the advertisement of Mr. J. A. Johnson, who is running a stage between Peterboro and Norwood, all orders left at the Huffman House in Peterboro will receive prompt attention, and as Mr. Johnson's charges are moderate, we would recommend all travelers to patronise him.

SKATING RINK.—A meeting of the Peterboro Skating Club will be held in the Town Hall, this Thursday evening, at eight o'clock; a full meeting is requested, as matters of importance will be brought before the meeting.

WE would call attention to the advertisement of Mr. D. McNaughton, in our Advertising columns, and more particularly to his Dandelion Coffee, which is a superior article to any that has ever been imported to Peterboro.

The Bohemian Glass Blowers are in Town; they give an exhibition every afternoon and evening, in the store lately occupied by Mr. D. Lemay, Henthorn's Block.

THE NUMBER OF WOMEN KILLED AT VICKSBURG.—Captain Harry McDougal, who has spent several days at Vicksburg since its surrender, writes the New Albany Ledger that he has made the most careful inquiry as to the actual number of women killed in the city during the bombardment of the town by Gen. Grant. He learns that the number is twenty. Besides these, quite a number of children were also killed. Capt. McDougal states that, during the bombardment, it was not an uncommon sight for women to be seen, parasol in hand, promenading the street, and that the number of them killed is attributable to the bravado spirit with which they thus exposed them selves.

In one instance of the death of children, eight or ten little boys were playing together in front of one of the caves dug into the hill-side for the protection of the women and children; a shell exploded in their midst, killing seven of them. One little fellow, a most interesting child, and son of a formerly prominent merchant of the town, was literally torn into fragments.

General Pemberton refused to allow the women and children to leave the city, and he is therefore responsible for the deaths of the women and little innocents killed during the bombardment. These statements were obtained from one of the principal business men of Vicksburg, and are doubtless correct.

THE SUPPLY OF MUSKETS AT SPRINGFIELD.—The United States Armory at Springfield continues to turn out about 1,000 muskets a day, and this number will not be diminished at present. Few and small orders for muskets have been received from Washington of late, and there are 50,000 of the model of '61 and 100,000 of the model of '63 now subject to the demand of the Government.

A BLOW TO THE BLOCKADE RUNNERS.—By the great conflagration at Havana no less than $1,500,000 worth of cotton, sugar, and other goods belonging to British blockade runners, was destroyed. A cavalry raid into Resoldom itself could not have done more damage to the enemy than this fire has accomplished.

Jefferson Davis has ordered out every white man under forty-five within the limits of the Confederacy, to serve in the Rebel army. This looks like war. Davis does not intend to wait for a decision of the courts before he compels the conscripts to take up arms.

EXEMPTION MONEY PAID.—One thousand conscripts in Lancaster county, Pa., have paid $3 00 each for exemption.

Commodore Porter believes in the law of moral responsibility. The citizens of Yazoo City who might have warned him of the existence of torpedoes, which destroyed the DeKalb, but did not do so, are levid upon to the extent of 3,000 bales of cotton to pay for her loss.

A great flood occurred in Cayuga county, N. Y., during the recent rains. The cemetery at Muravia, on the bank of Dry Creek, was washed away, and sixteen dead bodies carried down the stream. Great damage was done to the growing crops; and the total loss is estimated at about $100,000.

Affairs at the Capital.

[QUEBEC CORRESPONDENCE.]

QUEBEC, August 19th, 1863.

On Thursday last, the dominion of this ancient and interesting city, was roused from its slumbers by the booming of cannon, announcing the formal approach of His Excellency the Governor General to the Legislative Council Chamber, for the purpose of meeting the assembled wisdom of the Province on the opening of Parliament.

The attendance of members was unusually large; while the galleries were filled with the beauty, wit, wealth and fashion of the city. His Excellency being seated upon the Throne, requested both branches of the Legislature to elect their respective Speakers, stating that next day at 3 o'clock, he would meet them and declare his reasons for calling them together on this occasion.

The election of Speaker in the Upper House was a matter quickly disposed of. Not so, however, with the noisy and more turbulent little Commons. The debate was prolonged, fierce, and personal—the principal actors being Messrs. Cartier, Cauchon and Brown; the latter, evidently, laboring at the time under considerable irritation from taunts thrown out by the Opposition, that he was the rejected candidate for the Speaker's chair. How far the statement of the Opposition was correct I have no means of judging, further than by his own denial. During the previous day, and Thursday, it was spoken of freely by parties on both sides of the House, that Mr. Brown was the man; and it was not till late in the morning, that Messrs. Walbridge J. Shuter Smith and Notman were spoken of.

Yesterday, therefore, at the appointed hour, His Excellency again came down in state, and formally opened the first Session of the 8th Parliament, by the delivery of a Speech, which, although it does not by any means embrace all the great questions of the day, is not devoid of interest. The promise implied that measures will be submitted for the more efficient organization of the Militia, will be hailed with universal satisfaction in Western Canada, as will also any judicious and practical scheme of Retrenchment. I regret, however, to observe the absence of any measure for the encouragement of Immigration and settlement of the Waste Lands of the Crown in this Province. How any Government expects to relieve the rate-payers of Canada of their present burthens by simply cutting down the salaries of a few subordinates and clerks in the Public Offices, is more than I can imagine. This important omission will, I fear, give trouble, and compel several members of the House, who would willingly give the Ministry a longer lease, to vote against them. It is so important to create sources of Revenue, as it is to save. Without the latter, it would be useless to expect the people of this Province could be relieved of their burthens.

I observed that Mr. Conger has been true to his pledge, that he would not embarrass the Government until they had an opportunity of making known their policy.

The House adjourned immediately after the delivery of the Speech from the Throne, with an understanding that the Address would be taken up on Monday. Speculation is rife as to the chances of the Ministry being able to carry on with the narrow and unstable majority on the Speakership. My own opinion is, however, that their majority will increase, if they can but persuade the House of their determination to push forward, honestly, the business of the country.

ANOTHER ACROBAT KILLED.—Still another sacrifice has been offered up to the popular taste for sensational amusements. On Monday night a "Madame Genevieve" was exhibiting at Astonpark, Birmingham, on the occasion of a Forester's fete. She was walking on a rope sixty feet high with a sack over her head. The rope broke. The unfortunate woman fell to the ground and was instantly killed. The poor creature had been engaged to go through her perilous performance on the occasion of a fete held in the park, in aid of the funds of the Order of Foresters, and there were many thousands of persons present. The deceased was far advanced in pregnancy, and is said to have some presentiment that the rope was not safe. It had been recently spliced and gave way at that part. The poor woman who met her death as above described, appears to have styled herself the "Female Blondin," after the catastrophe happened to the original at Highbury-barn. She is said to be a native of Birmingham.

A KING FOR CANADA.—The London British Standard in some remarks on the defence of Canada endorses Mr. McGee's monarchial idea. We give an extract, which will certainly amuse some of our readers:—

"There is very little to fear from the United States, even should the Union be restored; but should a collision ever arise, with the experience of the States in the use of arms, it is certain beyond all rational contradiction, that England could not preserve Canada. Human nature is such, that unquestionably a large portion of the people would prefer entire independence of Great Britain. To that in the course of nature it will ultimately come, and then it may be uncertain whether Canadians will declare for a monarchy, with, perhaps, a son of Victoria for a king,—which would, we think, be incomparably the best thing they could do,—or declare themselves a republic, and form one of the mighty Federation. Geographical position, origin, language, and religion, would seem to recommend this; nothing could stand opposed to it, but a preference for the stability of a monarchy, with a well-defined aristocracy."

Down's Vegetable Balsamic Elixir, has been before the public for thirth years; and has never been known to fail. See advertisement in another column, and read the pamphlet accompanying the bottle Henry's Vermont Liniment, the new Pain-Killer acts like magic in removing pain, both externally and internally. A large bottle for 25 cts. Try it! 4 m.

If you would lose your last friend, all that is necessary is to lose your last dollar. Of all the scare-crows there are none that can equal an empty pocket.

To find out the number of children in the street, commence beating a bass drum. To find out the number of idle men, start a dog-fight.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

I have called together at this unusual season because I deemed an open appeal to the people before the meeting of your Parliament to obtain your advice and assistance in reference to the public affairs of the Province.

Although the period of the year at which you are now assembled is one that renders it difficult for many of you to leave your other avocations in order to give attention to your Parliamentary duties, I am persuaded that you will cheerfully co-operate with me at the present time in considering such legislative proposals as the exigencies of the public service may demand.

Measures of importance, the progress of which in the late Parliament was interrupted by the dissolution, will again be submitted to your notice.

I would specially direct your attention to the existing Militia Law, which requires extensive amendment in order to place this important arm of the public defence in a condition of efficiency.

The large increase which has occurred in the Volunteer Force, and the offers of service which I continue to receive from new Companies, are gratifying proofs of the patriotic zeal which animates the whole community in reference to the subject of public defence.

The interest which has been displayed in the formation of Drill Associations, and the manifest desire of the youth of the Country to perfect themselves in the use of arms, are satisfactory evidences that the people of Canada are prepared to submit to any personal sacrifices which can reasonably be demanded of them, in order to enable them, in the most efficient manner, to put forth their strength in defence of their institutions and their homes should circumstances ever require from them such an exhibition of patriotism.

I trust to your wisdom to give a proper direction to the excellent spirit by which the people are animated, and to vote liberality to supply the means by which practical advantage may be obtained from it.

A Bill for the equitable adjustment of the relations between Debtor and Creditor, and to afford relief to insolvent Debtors will be laid before you.

Certain alterations in the laws regarding the Administration of Justice will be submitted for your approbation.

The existing laws affecting the resignation of titles to real property in Upper and Lower Canada and concerning patents for inventions, as well as the Laws relating to the encouragement of agriculture will also claim your attention.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

The estimates for the current year for which provision was not made by the late Parliament, together with such additional estimates as may be necessary at the present time, will be laid before you without delay.

The last session of Parliament having abruptly terminated without the grant of the usual supplies for carrying on the Government, I have been obliged to undertake the responsibility of authorising advances out of the public chest to defray certain indispensable charges. Statements will be submitted to you from which you will perceive that the advances have been strictly limited to the unavoidable requirements of the public service.

Under these circumstances I confidentially rely upon your readiness to sanction the outlay which has been thus incurred as well as to provide for the necessary expenses of the Government for the current year.

Honourable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen:

I urge upon your early attention the state of the finances of the Province, and the relation which its expenditure bears to its income and resources.

You will not fail to concur with me in the expression of regret that for some years past the public expenditure has exceeded the annual income, and I cannot doubt that you will agree with me that the time has arrived when a serious effort should be made to avert the continuance of this deficiency.

I have received a Despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, enclosing copies of a correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and the Agent of the 'Atlantic and Pacific Transit and Telegraph Company,' in reference to a proposal made by that Company for the establishment of a Telegraphic and Postal communication between Lake Superior and New Westminster in British Columbia.

The importance of such an undertaking to the British North American Provinces, both in a commercial and Military point of view, induces me to commend the subject to your consideration. Copies of the correspondence shall be laid before you, and I feel assured that, should any proposal, calculated to effect the establishment of such communication on terms advantageous to the Province be submitted to you, it will receive encouragement at your hands.

I cannot refrain from congratulating you at this season of the year upon the prospect which everywhere prevails of an abundant Harvest. I sincerely trust that the prosperity with which it appears likely Providence will this year bless the Agricultural classes, may produce a corresponding improvement in our commerce and Manufactures.

In commending to your careful attention the public affairs of this Province, I depend upon your zeal and ability to promote whatever may conduce to the advancement of its future welfare, and I humbly invoke the Divine Blessing upon your deliberations, that they may be entered upon in an unselfish and impartial spirit, and may tend to the increase of unanimity, prosperity and contentment throughout the land.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYANT'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

The most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult Breathing, Sore Throat &c. &c. &c.

THESE WAFERS give the most instantaneous and perfect relief and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health who have tried other means in vain. To all clergymen and all constitutions they are equally a blessing and a cure—even deep despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hereditarily decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

To Vocalists and Public Speakers these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe constitutional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional vocalists

PROSPECTUS.

OF THE

TWELFTH VOLUME.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The July number commences the Twelfth Volume of the Atlantic Monthly, and will contain such a list of contents as will entitle it to marked consideration. Nathaniel Hawthorn contributes for the first number of the new volume "Outside glimpses of English Poverty," one of the most interesting of his admirable English Sketches.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has written for it "The Doings of a Sun-Beam." Robert Dale Owen discusses "The Claims of Labor or Service," and presents some new views for the study of the people of America. Gail Hamilton continues her popular "Gala Days." Professor Agassiz offers another eloquent paper on mountains. And many other articles of equal value with the above, will be includeded in the forthcoming number.

Begun in 1857, the "Atlantic Monthly" has now reached its sixty-eighth number. Its circulation increasing largely from the start, has given it such a currency throughout the country as no other magazine has ever acquired. Its faith in impartial liberty as a principle, and its warfare against Despotism in every form, have made it a welcome visitor, far and wide, every month. It does not abate in these our days of trial and battle, one jot of that firm belief in the brighter days to come which Right and Justice are sure always to win, but its future pages will show an increased activity in placing before the midst of the people an unfaltering confidence in the power of the North to limit the existence of a rebellion founded in cruel injustice and oppression.

The prosperity of the Atlantic enables its conductors to employ the most eminent talent of country in its columns. All the best known writers in American literature, contributing constantly to its pages, give in the sole right to be known as our national magazine. Its staff still comprises the following names among its leading contributors:—

James Russell Lowell, Henry W. Longfellow, Louis Agassis, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, C. C. Mosewell, T. W. Higginson, Author "Margaret Howth," Mrs. Julia W. Howe, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Oliver W. Holmes, John G. Whittier, E. P. Whipple, Bayard Taylor, Chas. E. Norton, G. S. Hilliard, H. Giles, Walter Mitchell, H. T. Tuckerman, John Weiss. Mrs. H. B. Stowe, Harriet Martineau, Charles Reade, "The Country Parson," Rose Terry, Harriet E. Prescott. Robert T. S. Lowell, J. T. Trowbridge, Edward Everett, Professor A. D. White:

The foregoing list it will be seen includes

THE LEADING AMERICAN WRITERS.

And is such as to warrant the publishers in promising

The Best Essays,
The Best Stories,
The Best Poems,

Which American talent can furnish.

NOTICE.

THE Municipal Council of the united Townships of Smith and Harvey hereby give notice that they intend at their meeting to be held at the Town Hall, in Smith, on the 17th day of August next, to pass By-Laws for the following purposes that is to say:—A By-Law to establish a Road, commencing where a post has been planted, on the easterly side of the River Road, on the South half of lot number one, east of communication road in said Township of Smith, at North West angle of a piece or parcel of land leased by John Robinson Benson to Martin Martyn, then easterly along the northern limits of said land 208 feet, more or less, to the north west corner of the Grist Mill, being the southern limit of Road to be laid out thirty feet wide, then at right angles northerly one hundred and twenty-six feet, being the easterly limit of allowance for said road of thirty feet wide, then at right angles easterly fifty feet, more or less, to the River Otonabee, being the southern limits of that part of said Road.

ALSO,—A By-Law for closing that part of the allowance for Road in the rear of the lots on the east side of the Communication Road that extends easterly from the River Road to the River Otonabee in said Township of Smith, unless cause should be shewn why such By-Laws should not be passed.

CHRISTOPHER BURTON,
Township Clerk.
Smith, July 14th, 1863. 29-4in

BY-LAW No. 18,

OF THE

Municipality of Ashburnham.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees for the Village of Ashburnham, have required the Municipal Council of the said Village to raise the sum of Two ve Hundred Dollars for the purpose of building and furnishing a School House in the said Village; and whereas it is desirable and expedient that the sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars be raised by Debentures, payable in five years; and whereas it will require that Debentures be issued for the sum of Sixteen Hundred Dollars to realize the said sum of Twelve Hundred Dollars, and to pay the interest, discount, and expenses connected therewith:

It is hereby enacted by the Municipal Council of the said Village of Ashburnham: That five Debentures be issued by the said Municipality, for the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars each: one of which shall be made payable on the First day of April in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868, and that the same be signed by the Reeve, and sealed with the Corporation Seal. And whereas, the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property of the said Village amounts, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, to the sum of Seven Thousand Five Hundred and Eighteen Dollars; and it will require that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be levied and collected in each year to pay the amount of the said Debentures:

It is hereby enacted, that a special rate of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar be raised, levied and collected on the assessed annual value of all the real and personal property in the said Village, over and above all other rates and assessments in the present year, 1863, and in each of the years 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, to provide for the payments of the Debentures to be issued as hereinbefore mentioned.

And it is further enacted, that a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Friday the Seventh day of August next, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the Forenoon.

TAKE NOTICE,

That the above is a true copy of a proposed By-law which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality after one month from the first publication in the Peterborough Examiner, the date of which first publication was on Thursday, the Sixteenth day of July, 1863; and the votes of the Electors of the said Municipality will be taken thereon, at the Town Hall of the said Village, on Friday, the Seventh day of August, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the Forenoon.

THE YOUNG WIDOW.

She is modest, but not bashful;
Free and easy, but not bold;
Likes an apple—pie and mutton;
Not too young, and not too old;
Half lavishing, half repulsive,
Not advancing, and not shy;
There is mischief in her dimples,
There is danger in her eye.

She has studied human nature;
She is schooled in all her arts;
She has taken her diploma
As the mistress of all hearts;
She can tell the coy moment
When to sigh and when to smile,
Oh! a maid is sometimes charming,
But a widow all the while.

Are you mad? her coy actions
Will her handsome face become;
Are you angry? she is wretched,
Lonely, friendless, tearful, dumb;
Are you mirthful? how her laughter
Silver-sounding, will ring out;
She can love, and smile, and play you,
As the angler does the trout.

You old bachelors of forty,
Who have grown so bold and wise,
In the Conclave of vanity
With the love lords in your eyes,
You may practice all the lessons
Taught by Cupid since the fall,
But I know a little widow
Who could win and fool you all.

VARIETIES.

Materials of which Soil is Composed.

Soils are named from the amount of proportions of the various substances which enter into their formation.

If a soil consists of sand it is called a sandy soil.

If the largest portion is clay it is called a clayey soil.

When lime predominates, it is called calcareous soil.

These substances may exist together, but in different proportions in the same soil, in which case it usually receives a distinct name.

A mixture of sand and clay with a small proportion of lime is called loam.

If it contains much lime it is called calcareous loam.

If it is composed of clay and much lime it is called a calcareous clay.

A certain proportion of these substances has given peculiar names to soils.

Pure clay, which is commonly called pipe-clay, is composed of sixty parts of silica, and forty parts of alumina, with a small quantity of oxide of iron. This kind of clay contains no siliceous sand which can be separated by washing with water.

The clay forms the strongest of clay soils. It consists of pure clay, mixed with from 5 to 15 per cent of siliceous sand, which can be separated from it by boiling or washing.

Clay loam contains from 30 to 60 per cent of fine sand, which can be separted by boiling. The different parts of this soil may be very easily separated, and it is consequently more easily worked. Such soil is very properly sought for in the selection of a farm.

A loam soil contains from 30 to 60 per cent of fine sand, which is retained so loosely that it can be readily separated from it by washing.

A sandy loam leaves from 60 to 90 per cent of sand.

In a marly soil the proportion of lime must be more than 5 per cent but less than 20 per cent.

Marls are called sandy, loamy and clayey, in accordance with the proportions they may contain of those substances, provided they be free from fine, or do not contave more than five per cent of this material.

LADIES vs. GENTLEMEN—Three things a lady cannot do:—

1st. She cannot pass a millinery shop without stopping.

2nd. She cannot see a piece of lace without asking the price.

3rd She cannot see a baby without kissing it.

Three things a gentleman cannot do—

1st. He cannot go through the house and shut the doors after him.

2nd He cannot have a shirt made to suit him.

3rd He can never be satisfied with the ladies fashions.

'Can you return my love, dearest Julia?' 'Certainly, sir. I don't want it I am sure.'

THE WORLD.

AN INDEPENDENT
Daily, Weekly and semi-Weekly
NEWSPAPER.

IN soliciting for another year a continuance and increase of the favor which in so short a period has grown to the World its present rank among American journals—a circulation, business patronage, and influence equalled by other journals only after the effort of many years—we appeal to our old and new subscribers for the promise that no labor nor expense will be spared to make the World what it aims to be,

The Best Newspaper in America.

In politics, now as ever, the World is independent but never neutral. Its only creed is on national one—of which are the corner stones.

The Union, the Constitution, and the Laws, and Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action

The political events of the past year have notably demonstrated the need of an able, fearless outspoken, first-class

Conservative Journal,

in the commercial metropolis of the country, which shall give constant, bold and vigorous utterance to the conservative sentiments of the less mixed and the honest masses of the nation. Opposing every enemy to whether armed in rebellion at the South, or insidiously planting the seeds of dissension at the North.

The Union,

Opposing every violation of the Constitution,

the only bond and hope of union, the only ground for the rights of man and for each and all the allegiance of the South:

Opposing every infraction of

The Laws,

in high places or in low, believing that obedience to Law is service to God.

Opposing every violation of the

Freedom of Speech, of the Press, of Political Discussion and Action;

by whomsoever those violations are committed, whether by the executive in its

Arbitrary, Illegal, and Unjust Arrests,

its refusal of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, its denial of the rights and liberties of citizens, its arrest without warrant, its imprisonments without trial, its abrogation of state and federal laws, its illegal proclamations of an empty emancipation, or whether those violations are committed by the party in power, its editors and its presses, advocating measures which must sunder the Union for the sake of destroying slavery, and denouncing treason against all their political opponents.

Loyal to the government always, it will give to the administration a hearty and vigorous support wherever and whenever the administration itself is loyal to the bond, the principles, and the purity of the government.

The World will oppose all compromises which would barter away or divide the Union, for which alone the North is waging war; it will oppose peace itself, till the success of the war secures the permanence of peace, and will urge the prosecution of the war with an economy which has not hitherto governed its expenditures, and a vigor which the nation during a year has prayed for in vain.

The same care will be exercised over the columns of the World to exclude systematic falsehood and a spirit of partisan brutality and recourse will always be had to the same high principles as well to guard its columns as to guide its judgment in all news and arrests.

All the News

will be found in the columns of the World from the various departments of human activity,

Political, Agricultural, and Commercial, as well as in Literature, Science and Art.

Mere Publication Assertions, Discourses, and Works of Art will receive the same careful and thorough attention.

The latest and most important news from London, Paris, Turin, Rome, Rio, Vienna, California, Japan, Egypt, and South America, our correspondents will send to us.

Our correspondents are attached to the various divisions of the army; will accompany them wherever they go, and by the free use of the telegraph and the mails, present in the columns of the World

A Complete History of the War,

from day to day, and from month to month.

In the Weekly and Semi-Weekly editions of the World, especially, large space will be given to

Agriculture,

and to all departments of

Manufacturing and Mechanical Industry.

The Weekly World will contain an admirable serial story during the current year.

THE DAILY WORLD.

The Daily World is the most complete Commercial and News Paper published in America. Besides as full telegraph news, war correspondence, and foreign news, &c., as any two morning daily, it contains also much fuller commercial news. Its Stock Reports, Produce and Cattle Market reports, Foreign and Domestic Importations, Stock Lists, and Commercial news, no business man can do without.

TERMS (INVARIABLE IN ADVANCE):

One copy for one year, $6.
Four copies for one year, $20.
For a club of ten copies an extra copy will be sent for one year.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY WORLD.

The Semi-Weekly World is a large quarto sheet, same size as the daily, containing all its news, correspondence, miscellany and editorials, its commercial and market news, and entertaining selections and miscellaneous reading. Its cattle market and provision reports make it highly valuable to every farmer.

EMPLOYMENT.

THE Undersigned has, for several years past, been engaged in a business, which has yielded him at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum. And is now willing, (which it is only because The business is of a highly genteel and general character, adapted both to either city, village, and country) any person of either sex, who may be desirous of profitable employment, which will PAY HANDSOME INCOME. To such I will send (free) full instructions from me, both in New York State and Pennsylvania, on receiving upwards of $15 per week by it, and there is no reason why any one else cannot do the same. Invalids, etc., can do well by it, as it is no peddling or fair, but a business that is perfectly respectable. Gentlemen and ladies of leisure who would like to engage in business, can do so by addressing me. Those who do not like to see full and explicit information, should not send for it. Those who do will find it to their advantage to address me at once. Capital not required. I will start you. No risk is run. On receipt of $1, I will send printed instructions by which any person may readily acquire the art, and these instructions with what I consider every particular relative to the carrying it on so that it will be highly profitable. The purchaser of the "printed instructions" will also be entitled to teach it to others; and I have sometimes received as high as $200, for teaching it personally to a single individual. I would state further that $25 will be given for anything that is necessary to commence the business with, and the articles can be got almost anywhere, in city or country, as if preferred, I can furnish them. Address ALVORD T. PARSONS, No. 36 LIBERTY ST., NEW YORK.

FINKLE & LYON
EWING MACHINE COMPANY,
638 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is specially commended. This circular can be had on application. It is very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared with much care and we will adopt in all statement therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changing and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family, for it will sew from one to twenty thicknesses of Marseilles without stopping, and makes every kind of perfect. Will go from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the spotted lamous leather, without changing the feed needle or tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

This have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine art. It was no ordinary triumph. Defiantly can we now say, "No other Machine compares with it in this respect." Hence, have we uniformly almost without exception—taken the highest premium, wherever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.:

We warrant every Machine we sell to give BETTER satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we refused more such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one

Poetry.

ALL THINGS ARE POSSIBLE.

Mark ix. 22-24.

"All things are possible." O weeping father,
Imploring for thy child some timely aid,
Doubt not Christ's power to help thee; it is rather
Thy trembling faith, on which the "if" is laid;
If thou can trust in Him, relief is sure
For his omnipotence will work the cure.

And, wary-hearted teacher, as thou grievest
Over fruitless toil, look up, for Christ is nigh:
"All things are possible," if thou believest,
If thou will simply on his grace rely;
At one soft touch of his, long-buried seed
Will yield the glorious harvest that you need.

O Christian for some loved one interceding,
Whose steps yet wander more and more astray;
Though Christ may seem regardless of thy pleading,
"All things are possible," believe and pray!
And soon with raptured gaze thou shalt behold
The wanderer safely gathered to the fold,

Faint not, O thou soldier of the cross, though lonely
And arduous is the conflict with the foe;
Grasp thy broad shield, confide in Jesus only,
And then undaunted to the warfare go;
"All things are possible," with Christ's own might
To animate his servant for the fight.

"All things are possible!" Such words of gladness
Should kindle hope, and banish all thy fears:
Yet if thou canst not rise above thy sadness,
Will thou respond—although it be with tears—
To Him who offers now to hear thy grief,
"Lord, I believe; oh, help my unbelief!"

Miscellaneous.

MY STEP-MOTHER.

I was six years of age when she came to fill the terrible void cause by the death of my mother. I can well remember how we children drew back from the stranger who had come to take her place. There were seven of us; each an idolitar at the shrine of our mothers memory. The oldest who possessed a quick, bright intellect, and was somewhat wilful withal, quite resented the idea of a second mother. Her strong hostility was contagious, for she was at the head of domestic affairs.—Then some sympathising neighbor would place her hand on my head and say, compassionately.

'Poor boy! You'll have a hard time trying to make a mother out of a mother-in-law. She'll never feel towards you as if you were her own child.'

Well, one day I was measured for a new suit of clothes. Other articles of toilet to correspond came ere long. Indeed, there seemed to be a general refurnishing throughout the house and household. What it all meant I could not conjecture, and no one told me. Then one afternoon there came a universal scrubbing of the faces and hands of the children and we were all dressed in our best clothes. There was something unusual about to take place.—What could it be? Not a meeting, for no such preparation, that is, in kind and spirit, ever preceded those staid religious gatherings often witnessed in our large, old-fashioned parlor. Still a hush and a gravity pervaded the busy household, imparting a sort of half and half aspect somewhat festive and somewhat solemn. At length the important secret was condescendingly communited to me.

'Now,' said my eldest sister, as she combed my hair back a la Muffit, (for, like other sentimentally inclined young ladies of the town, she had been captivated with the Irish preacher's eloquence,) 'do you behave like a little man this evening, for father's going to be married, and we are all to be at the wedding!'

'Wedding! What do they do there?'

'Why, you dunce, there'll be a whole parlor full of folks, and the minister 'll be there and make a speech and pray, and marry father and his bride, and then cake and wine will be passed round to all the company. You'll get a large slice of the best cake you ever ate, and a sip of the wine, and then—why, then you see you'll have a step-mother to train you in the way you should go. How'll you like that?

Bolt upright, in an exceedingly uncomfortable position, on a stiff, hard chair, scarcely daring to wink, I sat on that eventful night. Several relatives of the bride spoke kindly to me without in the least relaxing my mental and muscular rigidity, till one of them since known as the most lovable of aunts, brought me a piece of handsomely frosted cake, and a glass of wine, both of which I suppose were parts of the mysterious marriage rite. Though how eating and drinking helped to give me a new mother, I did not comprehend.

'Take it all, dear!' said she, sinking down before me on the carpet, as I diffidently broke off a crumb of the cake. 'It's yours, and you have as just a right to it as anybody if you are a little boy.'

I obeyed, thinking it part of the ceremony, gazing the while into her black eyes, that were soft, and limpid and lovely.

Our new mother went home with us that night, for the marriage was at "Aunt Abby's." What a constraint was on us, knowing a mother-in-law was installed in the home, to reign over us, her unwilling subjects. Very undemocratic it seemed, for we hadn't cast a vote nor been consulted even! However the general awkwardness was relieved by her leaving home on a bridal visit. She was to be gone a fortnight. How glad we were? How we dreaded her return, gossiping about it, hoping it might be protracted. But she came promptly back to her post, and, spite of my suspicions I couldn't help a warm glow as she kissed us each and unpacking her trunk gave the presents she had brought us. Her cordial, motherly greeting was a shock to her prejudices, from which they did not at once recover. But objections to the step-mother of a more personal nature were soon discussed.

"To think that your father should marry a country woman farm-born and bred,' said one. 'She cannot have seen anything of society, and must be coarse and low. And your first mother was a perfect lady!'

'New brooms sweep clean,' suggested another, 'but look out for black eyes; they are always deceitful!'

Poor, dear woman! little did she know what a burden she was assuming in becoming the wife of a widower with some children who had been taught to mistrust her noblest actions and set her authority at defiance. But meagerly could she forecast the toil and anxiety, the heart-griefs and perplexities, that were to wait on her footsteps daily; the gloomy hours of sickness and of death; the pecuniary reverses; and clothing and feeding and nurturing of those henceforward to call her mother. But, having put her hand to the plow she did not turn back from the heavy responsibilities of her lot. With a heroic endurance, a sublime self-forgetfulness, that, a thousand times since assuming manhood's cares have filled me with wonder as I retraced her history, did she press forward, conquering difficulties, winning triumph, until, without a peer, she sat enthroned in our love in her beautiful, I had almost said angelic goodness and costly devotion.

Ah! what would have become of us without her? What a marvel of a worker she was! Early and late at her tasks, never lagging, turning off labor with a dispatch that few might hope to rival. The sweet breath of the country, its good honest fare, its healthful scenes,—what would she have done as our mother without the firm-toned constitution that she moulded. And in her little tripping way, as she almost flew about the house, how graceful!

Rarely did she administer chastisement however richly deserved, for she well knew that officious critics would intermeddle.—She referred our misdemeanors to father. Though even then, there were those who intimated before us that she loved to find fault with her step-children.

One day an incident laid bare her heart in some measure to my eyes.

I had been perverse, disrespectful, disobedient. As a punishment, she sent me to bed supperless. I knew the punishment was deserved, but went to my room muttering complaints. At length I fell asleep. How long I remained thus I do not know, but suddenly waking, I saw her kneeling at the bed-side, her face pale, and mournfully fixed upon me.

'Oh,' said she gently, 'I am so glad you awoke. You lay so still, I was almost afraid you were not alive; I was listening to hear if you breathed. Are you well dear? I came to see. I know it's hard for you to go without your supper; it was hard for me to punish you, but I do want you to be a good boy, that you may grow a good and useful man!' Then, after a moment's pause, in eager tones she continued. 'Do you really think, dear child, that I love to find fault with you? or that I wronged you to-night in what I said or did?'

Thus did she yearn after me, with a mother's solicitude, and humble herself to plead with me after my wanton disobedience. My heart melted, and I said:

'I have been a naughty, selfish boy, and you have been kind to me. I deserved to be punished. I want you to forgive and love me."

How tenderly she imprinted a kiss upon my forehead, and fervently imploring God's blessing, glided from the room.

Her's was a rugged path for the most part, such as one sees running by a mountain side, over roots, and stones, and brambles. From what secret spring did she derive her more than human strength?—Where obtain the patience and fortitude that glorified her daily character? Ah! is there more than one fountain head?—Rising before day, while yet the occupants of the house were wrapped in sleep, she would retire to a little room and pour out her soul in fervent prayer. Sometimes the still air of the morning twilight has seemed to my quickened sensibilities to be pervaded and throbbing, as if her very soul, it its fervent pleadings, filled the space around me. Strangely thrilled, I have listened, wondering at the feeling that oppressed me; awe, sadness, self-dissatisfaction, desires for a better life crowding upon the mind, as the plaintive, tremulous voice could just be heard. When she had left communing with her Divine Friend, and we met her at the morning meal, no one could fail to be struck with her aspect; serious, serene, trustful—peace, Christ's peace, impressed upon her brow. You would take knowledge of her that she had been with Jesus.

'Ah!' said one, 'when she has children of her own then you will see the difference.'

Well, Lizzie, with her dark reflective eyes, came. Afterwards plump little Sarah, with hazel orbs. And it was not a miracle that half-sisters and brothers grew so into unity as to need to be reminded that the full relation was not theirs.

How often have I collected my scattered faculties as to master a new thought when a visitor remarked:

'These are your step-sisters, I suppose?'

'Step-sisters!' I would reply. 'O yes, I had forgotten it?' quickly to forget it again.

And what love was hers! What delicate, far-reaching sympathies! what boundless charity! what intuitive perception of others' rights, and ready, persuasive championship of the unappreciated and the wronged. What genial, winning ways towards the young; how self-denyingly benevolent. And as age enfeebled her step and silvered her head, growing younger and younger in her tastes, responding to the innocent jest, delighted in innocent enjoyments, charming every one with her kind words and kind deeds.

'Grandmother is coming!' Henry, the youngest, would exclaim, as he rushed into the house to be the first with the good news.

Sure enough. Feebly tripping along, with a mysterious package, too heavy for her strength, under her arm, she would approach, panting with exertion, her face radiant with affection.

'O mother!' we would say, 'you have taken too much pains to see us—the walk is too much for you!'

'Don't say a word!' she would answer, deprecatingly; 'I couldn't stay away any longer. I must know how you all do.—And here,' undoing her bundle, 'are some little things I have brought for the children.'

Her energetic heart grew in wealth of love marvelously, and her sympathies embraced the world. But specially among her kindred did their quick and active power appear. It was strange to us how soon she became aware of it, if any trouble invaded our ranks.

One night sudden evil news, of which none knew but ourselves, kept our little circle sleepless. We lived remote from the maternal roof. Next morning calling there, mother took me aside and said:

'Tell me my son, if you were unhappy last night. I must know, for I could not sleep—you were on my mind so. It seemed to me that you were in trouble!'

But she's gone. Three weeks ago today, over the wires flew the message:

'Mother is very sick, and can only live a few hours!'

Then immediately followed the crushing announcement of her death.

But she passed away as she had lived. In usual health she stood by her chair, about to take her seat at the dinner-table, uttering one of her pleasant remarks, when the wing of the death angel touched her; she fell speechless, unconscious, and never revived. It was as if the loving Saviour designed her last words should be like her, should represent her, and from the family board her spirit went up to the kindred hearts around the feast-table of heaven.

Dear, noble, stained mother! how can we bear to see thee no more, and hear no more thy words of love! But thou art safe, happy, robed in glory.—Watchman and Reflector.

More Indian Atrocities.

(From the St. Paul Press.)

Glencoe is all excitement. This afternoon a German named Julius Emery was brought to town wounded and faint from loss of blood. He reported that he was grinding his sythe at the house of a German family named Wendwitch, about four miles north, when the Indians suddenly made their appearance, two fired into the house, and as he turned at the report, one from a third passed through his shoulder. He ran towards a neighbour's house, was picked up and brought to town by a team belonging to a family named Zarnkey, who fled at the first alarm, reporting the Weidwitch family all murdered. Instantly all armed themselves, and most of the men on horse back and in teams, repaired at once to the spot. Here a horrible scene presented itself; the floor was covered with blood, and in the centre lay the husband and father, Charles Weidwitch, (pronounced Widowwitch) with his wife bending over him, exclaiming in most piteous tones 'don't kill us.' It took some time to convince her that, friends were at hand. She was shot through the face her arm broken, and some of her teeth knocked out. Her husband was shot through the thigh and shoulder and elbow joint, and is suffering intensely. They were brought to town at once, and placed under the care Dr. McNight.

The man reports that he went to the door to see what the dogs were barking at when a very large Indian, and two smaller ones shot him down in the doorway, at the same time shooting his wife through the window, as she was putting their children up stairs. With great presence of mind he kept calling out 'shoot them,' making a great noise, as though he had men in the house, and the Indians becoming alarmed made off. They visited Zarnkey's, destroyed the clock, tore tunes to pieces, and then disappeared in the woods. All the afternoon the fires have been raging through the Big Woods to the southeast, and even out on the prairies to the west, as if houses or stacks were burning. Thinking this might be a signal for an attack on Glencoe, a few of us repaired to the fort upon the hill to the west of the town, and put it in fighting order; and I also had the Methodist Church in the centre of the village barricaded with all the commissary store on hand. To-morrow we will throw up an earthwork around it.

Gigantic Swindle by a Woman.

$11,000 OBTAINED ON A FORGED DRAFT.

About two weeks ago a genteel-looking lady, calling herself Mrs. J. E. West, and claiming to reside in Sandusky, Ohio, went to Chicago and introduced herself to Samuel A. Sargent, Real Estate Agent, and expressed a desire to invest to a considerable extent in city property. She was shown a number of eligible lots, and bargained for them to the value of $10,000. A lawyer named Reed, of the firm of Knox, Eustace & Reed, was employed to examine the abstracts of titles before the sale was completed. The lady informed Mr. Reed that in order to make the first payment on the property, it was necessary that she should get a draft cashed, and, as she was a stranger here, she would like to be introduced at the banker's by some responsible and well known person. For this purpose Mr. Reed accompanied her to the "Merchant's Saving, Loan and Trust Company's" office, where she presented a draft drawn by an Eastern Bank upon another in New York city for the sum of $15,000. She also stated that as she needed but $11,000 at the time, she would leave the balance of the money on deposit. This apparent fairness, and the fact of Mr. Reed identifying her, had the desired effect, and she received the amount named, and the necessary receipt of $4,000 left on deposit. Since that time she has not been seen or heard from. After due course of time, it has been ascertained that the draft in question was originally drawn for the pitiful sum of fifteen dollars, and raised to $15,000 by the simple addition of three cyphers.

The End of an Old Dynasty.

(From the St. Paul's Press.)

Late European mails bring the interesting news that negotiations are nearly completed for the transfer of the Hudson Bay Company's rights and privileges to the British Government.

The measure is undoubtedly taken with a view to the organization of one or more Colonial governments, over the territory now under the Company's jurisdiction; and as it opens a new era of growth and prosperity to regions intimately identified by geographical affinities and commercial relations with Minnesota, it may be justly regarded as a matter of great importance to the whole Northwest.

The history of this powerful corporation which for two hundred years has reigned in absolute sovereignty, over a domain as large as European Russia—the last of the great trading monopolies which formerly held away over the Continent—is full of a kind of wild interest, which belongs rather to biography and personal adventure than to general history.

The Hudson Bay Company derive their privileges from a charter granted in 1670 by Charles II. to Prince Rupert and others covering all the hydrographical slope of Hudson Bay.

But it was not till 1714, when the treaty of Utrecht went into operation, that the French traders who had preceded them gave up the shores of Hudson Bay to the English Company. Fifty years later, under the treaty of Versailles, the French surrendered the country west of Lake Superior, and British traders from Canada began to occupy their deserted posts, and, following their old routes, to compete with the Hudson Bay Company. In 1783 these traders formed a powerful rival organization known as the 'Northwest Company" who pushed their traffic in furs via the Lakes from Montreal and the Red River valley, to the shores of the Pacific.

In 1811 the Hudson Bay Company claimed exclusive jurisdiction over the whole region, and in 1812 Lord Selkirk built a fort and planted a Colony at Red River, of which the present settlement there is the fruit.

A fierce contest between the rival companies was ended 1824, by a coalition under the name of the Hudson Bay Company.

In 1838, they obtained a license of exclusive trade over all of ultra-colonial British America. This license expired in 1859. A powerful movement organized in the local disaffections of the colony was formed in Canada, in 1856 and 1857, to prevent the renewal of the license. The discussion extended to England and the United States, led to a Parliamentary investigation, and for the first time the public of both continents became aware of the immense value of the region which for two centuries had been the exclusive property of a jealous monopoly of fur traders. The discoveries of gold on Fraser and other rivers, which have since extended to the Eastern slope, lent a new interest to the discussion. A new colony was formed on the Western slope of the Rocky mountains under the name of British Columbia. Then came schemes of a grand continental railway, and colonies.

Recently the British Government has granted a bonus of £12,000 per mile for the construction and maintenance of a road and waggon route through this region from Canada to the Pacific, with a view to encourage settlement, and probably with an after or reference to a railway.

It is now to be emancipated from the rule of the Hudson Bay Company, and before long, without doubt, Bulwer's projected chain of colonies will span the British half of the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

What London is.

Have any of the untraveled readers of The Independent an idea of the vast traffic that rolls daily through the interminable streets of London?

Here are some interesting statistics, gleaned from a recent return, which go to show what a gigantic place the British metropolis has grown to be:

On an average day, by actual count, 57,765, vehicles of all kinds pass through forty-eight streets—all of which streets are named in the return, with the respective numbers attached. These fifty-seven thousand conveyances carried on one day 1,141,086 passengers. The number of foot passengers was 535,535—making a total of 700,521 passengers pass daily through forty-eight of the streets of London. And these are some hundreds of streets and alleys in the city!

It is a curious fact, too, that out of the aggregate of more than 700,000 passengers, less than one-fourteenth entered these streets during the night. In the other words, out of nearly three-quarters of a million of people, only 49,000 were out after 11 o'clock at night. For so great a city, this a very small proportion, showing that the majority of Englishmen, love to get to bed betimes.

Through Cheapside one of the busy sections of the city, 13,000 vehicles roll daily—going from west to east—every afternoon between four and five o'clock. The number of persons who cross London Bridge every day is reckoned at 84,927, and the number of carts and waggons reaches 12,000.

The present population of London is about 2,800,000—or just two millions more than the city of New York.—B. Independent.

Experiments have shown that a man's finger-nails grow in a complete long, in four months and a half. A man living 70 years, grows his nails one hundred and eighty six times, allowing each time one half an inch long, he has grown seven feet nine inches of nail on each finger, and on fingers and thumbs, a aggregate of seventy-seven feet six inches.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 27TH, 1863.

THE present is no unimportant era in our country's history. It is big with signs and portents. The political heavens over head wear a darkened aspect. Hoarse thunders are heard muttering in the distance. Rumors and surmises of party revolutions and convulsions are rife on every hand. All this is not causeless. The two great parties into which Canadians are at present divided—the one wanting Lower Canada to rule—the other wishing to give Upper Canada a fair share in the Government—are marshalling their forces. Upper Canadians are beginning to think that it is time that they should be allowed to participate in those advantages and privileges of which for so many years back the Lower Canadians have enjoyed the absolute monopoly. The majority of the Lower Canadians appear determined to concede nothing they can possibly help. In this they are backed up and supported by a few traitors to Upper Canadian rights who amid the general defeat of their friends at the late elections by humbly begging pardon for the past, and promising better things for the future, managed to get themselves returned. The struggle between these two parties has already been commenced. Each is putting forth the most gigantic efforts for victory. The Upper Canadians are rallying around the present Administration. In it they see their only hope of a successful issue of their long cherished wishes. The Lower Canadians, on the other hand, are using every machination, plan and device, and arousing and bringing into action, all their energies to defeat the Government. The remarkable unanimity of sentiment and feeling that obtains among western members, strikes through them a feeling of alarm. It is ominous with defeat, and betokens the speedy annihilation of that power they have so long been permitted to enjoy. But tho' for the last few years the friends of Upper Canadian rights have been increasing in numbers and weight, the opposite parties are yet too nearly equally balanced for them to be very sanguine of success. They have much to encounter. Difficulties of no ordinary kind stare them in the face in every way they turn. They are not despondent, however. They mean to deserve success, whether they have it or not. It is to be hoped that they may be enabled, in spite of the bitter, persistent, factious opposition that is brought against them, to guide the ship of State into a safe moorage. We consider the interests of the Province, under present exigencies, absolutely demand that the Administration should be allowed to develope and perfect that policy which it has had, so yet, but an opportunity to foreshadow; and which, we believe, judging from this foreshadowing, dim and imperfect though it be, if carried out, will, while it tends to allay and soften down those bitter sectional asperities that it has hitherto been the studious aim of unprincipled politicians to keep up between the Provinces, be found, also, calculated to stimulate and foster the industrial energies of the people, and to place the country in a position that will ensure peace and prosperity at home, and consideration and respect abroad.

The future depends upon Upper Canadian members themselves. If they would only unite, as they ought, they would present a front alike imposing and impenetrable. Why should petty party differences keep apart those who have so many interests and aims in common, as those have who now represent this section of the Province in the Legislative Halls? It is this division that, in times past, has given Lower Canada the great power and advantages which Upper Canadians have envied and railed at in no measured times. Our Lower Canadian friends have thoroughly understood and appreciated the benefits resulting from "Union," and in all great questions, involving sectional views or issues they have been found united. Indeed by thus uniting together, they have not only been able to build up the interests of their own section of the Province at the expense of the Upper; but they have been able to squander our money and to force upon us laws and institutions against which, as we did not want them, we strongly protested and did our best vainly to oppose.—The lesson, however, should not be lost. U. Canadians, when they have the opportunity, should profit by it. Lower Canadians must be told that the people of this section will no longer submit to be domineered and lorded over; that while they are willing to give them equal rights, and they are as firmly determined to have them. If the Conservative part of the House only prove true to the high and imperative claims upon them, the people of Western Canada will no longer have the great grounds for complaint they have undoubtedly had. The Conservative members have the balance of power, as it were, in their hands. The Government, evidently, seem anxious honestly, and fairly, and equitably to administer the affairs of the country without reference to section, class or creed—treating all alike and acting and concerting all measures for the general good. We, therefore think that the Conservatives in resolving not to embarrass the government but to give it their cordial support where they conscientiously can, will not only be studying the interests of the Province, but the wishes and inclinations of their constituents. The great political struggle now waging is watched with interest, and the result anxiously waited for. Traitors to Upper Canada sights will also be watched.

THE RANKIN CASE.

The Leader and journals of id genus, are trying their best to make a vast amount of capital out of the Essex election business. They will, we think, however, signally fail. It was no ministerial question at all; in fact, some who were politically opposed to Mr. Rankin supported the motion that he should be reseated. What are the facts of the case? When the polling was over, it was found that the summing of the numerical statements sworn to by the several Deputy Returning Officers gave Mr. Rankin a majority of two. But in the reckoning contained in the affidavit accompanying the Anderdon Poll-book is included a vote of one Brooks for Rankin. In the poll-book this vote was transferred from the Rankin column to that of O'Connor. Two votes also appear for O'Connor after which are the words 'refused to swear.' Now, if the votes as they appear upon the poll-books, including the votes of Brooks and those who refused to swear, be summed up, O'Connor would clearly have a majority of one. But it seems abundantly evident that the poll-book was tampered with—by whom, it remains yet to be seen. Now the law emphatically requires that the Returning Officer should be guided by the sworn affidavits of his Deputies. If this were not the case, it can be easily conceived how any unprincipled Returning Officer might so tamper with and "doctor" the poll-books after they came into his possession, as to return whatever candidate he might, in his mightiness, consider desirable. It is notorious that the Sheriff of Essex is a warm friend of O'Connor, and, no doubt, thought he could best subserve his friend's interests by being blind to the true state of affairs. But so certain was he of the wrong he was committing, that, although by his own summing up, O'Connor had the majority of votes, he refused to declare O'Connor elected By this course he, perhaps, thought he would be able to serve his friend and party, and at the same time, save his own neck, if his friend and party were unsuccessful in the efforts they were putting forth for the reinstatement of the corruptionists to power. It was his duty to declare one or the other of the candidates elected. By law there was no alternative. Nevertheless he took the matter into his own hands; but if we mistake not, and the Ministry does its duty, he will never have the opportunity given him again of depriving a large constituency of its member—it may be for a whole Session. Mr. Scatchard seeing the injustice done to the County of Essex, and personally believing from an examination of the poll-book, and from other evidence presented, that Mr. Rankin was duly elected, brought in a motion that he should be allowed to take his seat. This was not done, however, that all investigation might be stifled, and that Mr. Rankin should be forced upon the House, right or wrong. Not at all. The motion was merely to declare that prima facie Mr. Rankin had the majority of votes. Mr. O'Connor would then have the right to appeal and the matter would have been referred to a Committee in the regular course of business, and justice done.

The motion, after several amendments had been made in the unsuccessful attempts to defeat it, was finally lost by the casting vote of the Speaker. This vote, by the way, of the Speaker, is not much like that of a bitter partizan, as he was proclaimed to be by the Opposition before his election. But it was not a party division, as it was expressed by the Premier in the course of the debate. In reviewing the matter, though we think it is not right that Mr. Rankin should be deprived of a seat to which he is justly entitled; still, on the whole, we cannot refrain from stating it as our opinion that the loss of Mr. Scatchard's motion is not a thing greatly to be regretted. Had it been carried, it might, hereafter have been construed into a precedent—which, to say the least, is not very desirable.

MR. CONGER.

On Thursday last, Mr. CONGER called the attention of the House or rather of the Government, to the importance of encouraging immigration and the rapid settlement of waste lands. In a very lucid and practical speech, he pointed out the benefits resulting from a proper consideration of these subjects by the Government. The claims of the country in rear of us found a warm friend and advocate in Mr. CONGER. The Commissioner of Crown Lands, in answer, highly complimented Mr. CONGER, on the zeal and energy he had so long manifested in the opening up and settling of the back country of the County he represented. He mentioned some difficulties the Government had to encounter in settling waste lands; but we have every reason to believe that he and indeed the Government generally, will be found ready and willing to assist and cooperate with Mr. CONGER, in any measures, his experience may suggest for the benefit of that "region" with which his name is so intimately associated and on which he continues to feel so lively an interest.

WANTED TO KNOW!

Where the Mechanic's Institute has stowed itself away? Where the Library is? Who the Officers are? And why a Town of the size and importance of Peterborough should be deprived of a privilege that almost every little insignificant Village enjoys and proudly boasts of? It certainly does not speak much for our intelligence enterprise—intellectually considered—that winter after winter passes without lectures, and a public library is among we a thing unknown.

Whose blame is it? The fault must be at some-body's door, at whose?

NEWCASTLE DIVISION.

The nomination for this Division takes place at the Victoria Hall, Cobourg, on Wednesday next, the 2nd of September, and Polling days on Thursday and Friday, the 10th and 11th.

MR. BAXTER.

REV. M. BAXTER, has been lecturing in this place for the last week on the prophecies. On Friday and Saturday evening he spoke in the Town Hall. He has spoken, to the Episcopal, Presbyterian and Wesleyan Churches. His audiences have been large and attentive; indeed that of Sunday evening was the largest we believe ever assembled in the Presbyterian church. Mr. Baxter's views may invite differences of opinion; but no one can doubt his earnestness and sincerity, in inculcating what he deems to be the true interpretation of the different prophecies.

He believes that the tabering of the millennial period is nigh at hand; and that the present Emperor of the French is the anti-christ prefigured in Scripture. We will not say more on the matter as in next issue we may notice the lecture at further length. We may add that Mr. Baxter is a fluent and earnest speaker, and has the power in no small degree of interesting his hearers.

Mr. Baxter lectures in the Wesleyan Church, this evening at 8 o'clock, in Springville on Sunday morning, and at the brick Presbyterian Church, Peterborough, on Sunday afternoon at 7 o'clock and at half-past seven; at Keene on Monday and Tuesday evenings; and at Lakefield on Thursday and Friday evenings.

The following is an extract from an outline of his discussions prepared by himself—it being all we have room for in the present issue.

"The great event now being waited for by students of prophecy is a seven years covenant to be made between Napoleon and the Jews, seven years before the end; and which if 1870 be the end, ought to be made in 1863. Many expositors hold that the last verse of Daniel is thus to be fulfilled by a seven years covenant being made between the Antichrist, or "Prince that shall come," seven years before the close of this dispensation; and it is believed that the advent of Christ in the air, to take to heaven the 140,000 wise virgins, will be two years and five or six weeks after the date of the covenant—that is, about five years before the End. And the 3½ years Great Tribulation "such as never was from the beginning of the world, no, nor ever shall be," (Dan. xii 1, Matt, xxiv 21, Mark xiii 19) is the latter half of this covenant-week of seven-years,—being also the 3½ years' persecution of Christians by Napoleon in conjunction with the Romish Church, (Dan. vii 25, xii 7, Rev. xi 23, xii 6, 14, xiii 5). During this persecution, which is to be universal, and unspeakably worse than anything hitherto known, millions of Christians will be massacred, Christianity will almost be swept from the face of the globe, and this earth will become like a hell, and most of its inhabitants like devils. But at the end of the 3½ years, Christ will descend and destroy the incorrigible, and convert and spare many of the Jews and heathens, and commence the Millenium."

By the "Asia" Mails, we notice that the harvest prospects in great Britain were never better; even in Ireland, whose wretched harvest during the last three or four years have almost beggared the country, and driven thousands of the population across the Atlantic, seems likely to be largely compensated in 1863 for her past sufferings.

THE ROYAL FAMILY.

The Princess of Wales is in good health, but is seeking repose at present. They were about to proceed on their way to the Royal residence in the highlands of Scotland when the mail left. The Queen, too, is availing herself of the season to make a journey to Germany, where her stay will be brief, and on her return she will join her family in Scotland.

A WOMAN by the name of Mrs. Briers, was killed on the Great Western Railway, on Monday last, when the train was within a mile and three quarters of the city of London C. W., the engine driver observed an object on the track, and immediately whistled put "on brakes," but before the train could be stopped it passed the object a distance of one hundred yards. Whiskey of course was the cause, as an empty bottle was found a short distance from her.

MR. THOMAS DALY, has gone to Quebec, for the purpose of pushing claims to a seat in the House. He says he has little doubt of being able to unseat Mr. MACFARLANE, as he feels confident that he has 170 good votes more than the sitting member.

The sentence of death on the murderer Greville, now in Quebec jail, has been commuted to imprisonment for life.

MR. DISTIN'S AXE Factory, and a hardware store, were destroyed by fire on Sunday night last, at Galt. The loss it is supposed was heavy.—Berlin Telegraph.

The loss occasioned by the fire at Belleville, on the 24th inst., amounts to $10,000.

ON MONDAY NIGHT last, a quorum could not be mustered in the Town Council.

W. S. CONGER, Esq., M. P. P., will accept our thanks for parliamentary papers.

THE DIVISION COURT will be held in in this Town to-morrow, Friday.

TUESDAY NEXT is the day on which the Autumn Fair is held in this Town.

Commerce seems to be flourishing on the great lakes. The number of vessels, including steamers, engaged in the navigation of those waters, is stated at 1,761.

Affairs at the Capital.

[QUEBEC CORRESPONDENCE.]

QUEBEC, August 22nd, 1863.

The past week has been one of more than ordinary interest. Monday being named as the time for taking up the consideration of the Address. The Premier entered upon his explanation of the difficulties between some of his colleagues and himself. The Hon. gentlemen was followed by Messrs. Sicotte, Dorion, Evanturel, Mowat, McGee and Foley—who severally acquitted themselves with much ability. The Opposition were as a matter of course, delighted to witness these dissentions between members of the Government, as it existed at the time of the appeal to the Country in May last, and will no doubt use it against the present Administration with considerable effect.

On Tuesday, the Essex Election matter was brought before the House, by Mr. Scatchard, who moved to seat Mr. Rankin, this brought up the Opposition, and an amendment was prepared by the Hon J. H. Cameron, to send it—where he argued it legitimately belonged—to an election committee. The discussion was conducted with much warmth and lasted until late on Thursday afternoon, when the motion of Mr. Scatchard was rejected by the casting vote of the Speaker. This decision—though it evidently at the moment disappointed many of his party friends—is now received with favour, in as much as it furnishes evidence of Mr. Walbridge's determination to preside over the deliberations of the House with candour, impartiality and fairness—a quality rarely to be found in strictly party men.

Immediately after the disposal of the Essex affair, the House proceeded to the consideration of the Address; and in the course of the evening disposed of the first eleven paragraphs. Yesterday the debate was resumed by the member for Peterboro', who called the attention of the Government and the House to what he conceived be a very serious and important omission in the policy of the Government upon the great question of Immigration and settlement of the Wild Lands of the country—and in the course of his remarks pointed out the great advantages which the country would derive from the introduction of Capital and Labour. Mr. Conger's speech was well received by the House, and will, no doubt, in time, produce its effect. The Hon. the Commissioner of Crown Lands replied in a well delivered speech, of considerable length, in which he endeavoured to justify his Report, and closed by admitting that the Government had no settled policy, but were willing to adopt any well digested scheme which might be submitted to them. At the opening of the evening sitting, the Hon. Mr. Sicotte moved his amendment to the 12th paragraph, in a long and able speech, which was ably replied to by the Hon. Mr. Dorion—both gentlemen speaking in English. As this matter involves a great constitutional question, it is believed that only a very few members of the House will venture to take part in it.

You will have observed how very equally parties are divided. This state of things may, in my opinion, be attributed to a want of harmony in the Reform ranks—caused by the ill-advised change of policy adopted on the advent of the Macdonald-Sicotte Administration. Much speculation exists as to the result of the vote upon the amendment. The Ministry are confident of a majority of three or four; while the Opposition are equally sanguine. A few more days will tell the tale. Should a break up take place, which is not unlikely, a new combination will, no doubt, be formed—and new blood introduced into the Cabinet.

The House is very full. On the division the other night, only two members were absent; and on the next, it is believed, that every seat except that for the county of Essex will be filled.

The City itself is, just now, crammed with visitors of various kinds; so much so, that it is difficult to get a bed at any of the leading hotels. Every boat and train appears to groan under its load of passengers and luggage, among whom are various numbers of persons from the Federal States who are visiting all the places of interest in and about Quebec.

A TREMENDOUS fire in Havana, Cuba, recently consumed $5,000,000 worth of property.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Fort Monroe, August 20.—Two refugees arrived in Norfolk from Richmond who were born in Canada. They report that the Confederate Government is terribly frightened about Charleston, and say if it is taken all is lost. A guard is kept about the residence of Jeff Davis night and day to prevent him running away from Richmond.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 21.—The Richmond Whig of to-day contains the following:—

Charleston, August 20.—The enemy's operations, during the last 24 hours, have been mostly confined to a steady and continuous bombardment of Fort Sumter from their parrott guns on Morris Island. Their fire begins to tell on Fort Sumter, which replies only at long intervals. The defence of the harbor depends mainly upon Sumter. Even if that Fortress should be battered down, the harbor may still be held.

Gov. Aontiom has issued a proclamation urging the removal of all non-combatants from Charleston as soon as possible. The 200-pounder parrott guns of the enemy are too much for the walls of Sumter, and the Fort only replies at intervals. It has been determined to defend the city street by street and house by house, as long as a foot of earth is left.

Fort Monroe, Aug. 23.—The steamer Maple Leaf arrived this morning from off Charleston, and reports leaving Stono Inlet on Thursday at which time the guns of Sumter were silenced and several breaches made in its walls. No doubt was entertained that the rebels would soon surrender Sumter. At the same time our monitors were close under the guns of Wagner, and by the aid of our sharpshooters had nearly silenced the enemy.

Fort Monroe, Aug. 22nd.—The Richmond Whig of the 21st says:—The loss of Vicksburg and the failure at Gettysburg are the two events of the year, which seem to render highly probable a long and almost indefinite continuance of the war. Apart from the victories we may achieve in the field, there are but two means of counteracting the baneful effects of events and bringing hostilities to an early close. These are either foreign intervention or a determined opposition by the conservative masses of the North to the abolition faction which has control of the Government at Washington. We want the aid of France; and are able to pay for it. Let us do it. We shall then have peace, or the power to work a rich revenge on our foul foe.

St. Louis, Aug. 24.—An officer just from the army of Gen. Rosencrans reports that the centre of Gen. Bragg's army was at Chattanooga when he left, and that the left wing was at Bolton, under Generals Buckner and Cleveland, with a force of 10,000 rebels. Gen. Bragg can muster an army of about 30,000 fighting troops.

The previous reports of the desertions from the army of Gen. Bragg are fully confirmed. The mountains in East Tennessee are swarming with deserters, and it is estimated that a thousand of them come into our lines weekly.

New York, Aug. 25.—A Moris Island letter to the Herald states the appearance of the gorges and face of Fort Sumter last night, and its parapet was not unlike that presented by Fort Pulaski. On the evening of the first day's fire 30 or 40 large holes could be counted on the face of the work; the parapet was knocked off in pieces. The grim old fort looks as though she had received very severe treatment at our hand. Three days of such work will bring down Sumter around the heads of its defenders, if they wait so long. It certainly cannot hold out much longer than that time. Forts Wagner and Gregg will be attended to in due time.

Fort Monroe, Aug 24.—The bombardment still continued, and the south wall of Sumter had been demolished almost to its base.

New York, Aug. 25.—The Great Eastern has 1,000 passengers and a large cargo.

Fort Monroe, August 24.—The flag of truce steamer New York has arrived from City Point. She brings the latest Southern papers. The Richmond Sentinel of the 24th contains the following highly important dispatch:—

"Charleston, Aug 22.—Gen. Gillmore's demand for the surrender of Fort Sumter and Morris Island, with a threat to shell Charleston in four hours from the delivery of the paper at Fort Wagner, was received and returned at seven o'clock this morning. Gen. Beauregard in his reply charges inhumanity and violation of the law against Gen. Gilmore, and affirms that if the offence be repeated he will employ stringent measures for retaliation. Up to this time his threat to shell the city has not been executed."

Charleston, Aug. 23.—Gen. Gillmore sent a communication at 11 o'clock on Sunday giving notice that at 11 o'clock to-morrow he would open fire on Charleston, and that in the meantime non-combatants could go out of the city.

Chattanoogs, August 22.—The Yankees commenced shelling the city of Chattanooga yesterday without giving notice of their intention to do so. All is quiet to-day.

Philadelphia, August 25.—A private despatch received here from Washington says, the war department has the announcement of the surrender of Fort Sumter.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT MANILLA.—The Boston Traveller says: A few additional particulars of the terrible earthquake at Manilla on the 3rd and 4th of June last, have been received. The loss of life among the inhabitants is represented to have been very great. The first shock was experienced at about 7 o'clock on the 3rd, and several followed until six o'clock the next evening. The Cathedral, the Royal Chapel and the churches St. Domingo and St. Isabella, the palace, military hospitals and Tribunal of Commerce, were all raised to the ground. The San Fernando and French hotels disappeared, with numerous other houses of note. A Spanish steamer which was laying off the port at the time, was wrecked, and all hands were lost. A telegraphic despatch from the American house of Russell & Sturgis to Baring & Co., London, and by them forwarded to their mercantile correspondents in this city, is as follows: "All the warehouses and hemp screws are destroyed; ourselves safe; no ship loading for the United States."

IN 1853, there were 2,509 of sewing machines sold in America. In 1859 the sales reached 46,243. The annual saving to the United States in labour alone is computed at £29,000; that is to say, this extra amount must have been paid, if the same amount of clothing had been produced by manual work.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—The Galt Reporter says that, on Saturday, Mr. Mathieson, farmer, near Cedar Creek, Dumfries, was struck down insensible by lightning, just as he was entering the barn, and had two horses killed at the same time. The barn was not injured, and Mr. Mathieson is recovering from the effects of the shock.

A Noble Heroine.

The Missouri Democrat has received from its correspondent at Jefferson City the following order. It explains itself. A splendid revolver worth $100, is to be presented to the heroine, Miss Schwartz, by Acting Governor Hall, on behalf of Missouri. The testimony is well deserved:—

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT CENTRAL MISSOURI,
Jefferson City, Aug 9.

(General Order No. 42.)—On the night of the 6th inst., a party of bushwhackers, some three in number, visited the house of a Mr. Schwartz, about twelve miles from Jefferson City, in Cole county, and on demanding admittance, they were refused by Miss Schwartz, a young lady of fifteen. They replied they would come in, at the same time trying to break down the door. While this was going on, the other inmates of the house, viz: Mr. Schwartz, John Wise, Captain Golden, Government horse-dealer, and a young man in his employ all left, taking with them (as they supposed) all the arms and ammunition. In their hasty retreat they left behind a revolver, which Miss Schwartz appropriated to her own use. She went to the door, and on opening it, presented the pistol to the leader of the gang, telling them to "come on if they wanted to, and that some of them should fall, or she would." They threatened to kill her if she did not leave the door; she replied, "the first one who takes one step towards this door dies, for this is the house of my parents, and my brothers and sisters, and I am able to, and shall defend it." Seeing that she was determined in her purpose, and after holding a consultation together, they left.

Here is an instance of true courage, a young girl of fifteen years of age, after all the inmates of the house had fled, leaving her alone to her fate, with the courage worthy of a Joan of Arc, boldly defended her home against three bloodthirsty and cowardly ruffians, and by her coolness and heroic daring succeeded in turning them from their designs.

It is with feelings of no ordinary pride and pleasure the Commanding General announces this act to the citizens in his District. On the other hand, those miserable cowards who deserted this brave girl in the hour of danger, flying from the house, leaving her to her fate, are unworthy of the name of men, deserve the scorn and contempt of the community at large, and whose society should be shunned by every one who has the least spark of honor or bravery within them.

By order of
BRIG. GEN. BROWN.

Sickness not Causeless.

There never can be disease without a cause; and almost always the cause is in the person who is ill; he has either done something that he ought not to have done, or he has omitted something which he should have attended to.

Another important item is, that sickness does not, as a general thing, come on suddenly; as seldom does it thus come, as a house becomes enveloped in flames, on the instant of the fire first breaking out. There is generally a spark; a tiny flame, a trifling blaze. It is so with disease, and promptitude is always an important element of safety and deliverance. A little child wakes up in the night with a disturbing cough, but which, after a while passes off and the parents feel relieved; the second night the cough is more decided; the third it is croup, and in a few hours more the darling is dead!

Had that child been kept warm in bed the whole of the day after the first coughing was noticed, had been fed lightly, and got abundant, warm sleep, it would have had no cough the second night, and the day after would have been well.

An incalculable amount of human suffering, and many lives would be saved every year if two things were done uniformly. First, when any uncomfortable feeling is noticed, begin at once, trace the cause of it and avoid that cause ever after.—Second, the means at once to remove the symptom; among these, the best are those which are most universally available and applicable, as rest, warmth abstinence, a clean person, and a pure air. When animals are ill, they follow nature's instinct and lie down to rest. Many a valuable life has been lost by the unwise efforts of the patient to "keep up," when the most fitting place was a warm bed and a quiet apartment.

Some persons attempt to "harden their constitutions," by exposing themselves to the causes which induced their sufferings, as if they could by so doing get accustomed to the exposure, and ever thereafter endure it with a great amount of impunity. A good constitution, like a good garment, lasts the longer by its being taken care of. If a finger has been burned by putting it in the fire and is cured ever so well, it will be burned again as often as it is put in the fire; such a result is inevitable.—There is no such thing as hardening one's self against the causes of disease. What gives a man cold to-day, will give him a cold to-morrow, and the next day and the next. What lies in the stomach like a heavy weight to-day, will do the same to-morrow; not in a less degree, but a greater; and as we get older, or get more under the influence of disease, lesser causes have greater ill effects; so that the older we get the greater need is there for increased efforts to avoid hardships and exposures, and be more prompt in rectifying any "symptoms" by rest, warmth and abstinence.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A SCHOONER CAPSIZED IN THE LAKE.—THREE LIVES LOST.—Information reached Toronto yesterday that the schooner Wingfleet, of Wilson, while on her way up the lake, on Saturday, bound for this port, was suddenly capsized in a gale opposite Cobourg. The captain's wife and child and the steward were drowned. The captain and five of the crew escaped a watery grave as if by a miracle, all having been under the vessel for a short time after she was upset. Several boats went off to the assistance of the crew, and the schooner was towed into the harbour. She had no cargo on board at the time of the accident. —Globe.

The Buffalo brokers are running against each other to secure Canadian money which is now quoted at one per cent premium, but the run is nothing compared with that affair the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," which the people have found out to be the very best thing for the cure of colds, rheumatism, sore throat, bowel complaints, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers in Patent Medicine at 25 cts per bottle.

A gentleman reading on the mountain, Nassagaweya, had 250 bushels for half a day's thrashing. The wheat is of a superior quality, and has the appearance of rust, indicating that in that section, especially the farmers have but little reason for complaint of a deficient wheat crop.—Milton Champion.

The Genius of Rascality

A shrewd trick was recently practised in London. A dandy, dressed up in the most faultless style, called at a large jewelry store, and after a short examination, bought a gold watch for £20, and he handed the rejoiced salesman a £100 note. He examined it carefully, and, finding it to be genuine, he gave him back the required change, £80. Just as he was stepping out of the store, he was met by another dandy, equally as well dressed, and whom he seemed to recognise. He exhibited his newly bought watch to his friend, and was very profuse in his praises about it and its very fine finish. Both stepped back into the store, and a short persuasion on the part of the first dandy induced the new comer to buy a similar watch for the same price. He also paid for his watch with a £100 note (the English dandies do not trouble themselves with small change) and received his change, after the experienced dealer had satisfied himself that the note was genuine. But just as the last dandy was in the act of pocketing the money and watch, both dandies suddenly appeared very much agitated; they looked into the street, whispered to each other then suddenly made a dash for the door. But to the dismay and discomfiture of both, a constable jumped out of the carriage, collared them both, and with a triumphant "I have got you at last, you scoundrels," led them back into the store. Here he informs the dealer that these two gentlemen are two of the sharpest swindlers in London, (which is saying a good deal) and asked the jeweller what business he had with them. These gentlemen have bought two gold watches for forty pounds, and paid for them in good money, and the now frightened dealer. The constable laughed right out, and asked him if he had not been paid in hundred pound notes. The jeweler said he had a fearful light beginning to dawn upon him. The constable then demanded to see the notes. The Corpor; delicti were produced, and the constable informed the now thunderstricken dealer that the notes were forged, and the culprits overwhelmed with the weight of their guilt, silently acknowledged the deed. The vigilant officer, jubilant over the important catch seizes watches, money and prisoners, and summoning the jeweler to attend the police bureau in an hour, puts the prisoners in a carriage and drives off on a gallop. Just as the last sound of the carriage had died away in the distance, the jeweler recovered from his surprise. It now occured to him that perhaps it would have been better if he had accompanied the expedition. Breathless, he dashed out, but the cab had vanished. He made inquiries at the police bureau, but the trio had vanished, and neither cab nor men were ever seen again. Deeply hurt at the immorality of the times, which even made the sacred uniforms of the police serve them in their nefarious schemes, the compatriot of the great McDonald returned home a sadder but a wiser man.

Waltzing

The Atlantic Monthly for August has the following severe criticism on the above named popular amusement:

Waltzing is a profane and vicious dance always. When it is prosecuted in the centre of a great crowd, in a dusty ball, on a warm mild summer day; it is a disgusting dance. Night is its only appropriate time. The blinding dazzling gaslight throws a graceful glare over the saifent points of its indecency and blends the whole into a wild whirl that dizzies and daxes one; but the uncomprising afternoon, pouring in through manifold windows, tears away every illusion, and reveals the whole coarseness and commonness and all the repulsive details of this most alien and unmaidenly revel. The very pose of the dance is profanity. Attitudes which are the instinctive expression of intimate emotions, glowing rosy-red in the auroral time of tenderness and justified in unabashed freedom only by a long and faithful habitude unselfish devotion, are here openly and deliberately and carelessly assumed by the people who have but a casual and partial society acquaintance. This I reckon profanity. This is lowly the most culpable. That it is practised by good girls and tolerated by good mothers does not prove that it is good. Custom blunts the edge of many preceptions. A good thing soiled may be redeemed by good people; but waltz as many as you may, spotless maidens, you will smut yourselves, and not cleanse the waltzing. It is of itself unclean.

There is another thing girls and their mothers do not seem to consider. The present mode of dress renders waltzing almost as objectionable in a large room as the boldest feats of a French ballet dancer. Not to but too fine a point on it, I mean that these girls' gyrations in the centre of their gyrating, and centrifgal hoops makes a most oporatis drapery display. I saw scores and scores of public waltzing girls last summer, and among them all I saw but one who understood the art, or at any rate, who practised the art, of avoiding an indecent exposure. In the glamor of the gaslight, it is only flash and clouds and instinctness; in the broad and honest daylight, it is not. Do I shock ears polite? I hope so. If the saying of shocking things might prevent the doing of shocking things, I should be well content. And is it an unpardonable sin for me to sit alone in my room and write about what you go into a great hall, before hundreds of strange men and women to do.

A WORD TO YOUNG MEN.—One of the meanest things a man can do, and it is not at all of uncommon occurrence, is to monopolise the time and attention of a young girl for a year or more, without any design to object, and to the exclusion of others of his sex, who, supposing him to have matrimonial intentions, absent themselves from her society. This 'dog in the manger' way of proceeding should be discountenanced and forbidden by all parents and guardians.—It prevents the reception of eligible offers of marriage, and fastens on the young girl, when the acquaintance is dissolved the unenviable and unmerited appellation of flirt.' Let all your dealings with women, young men be frank, honest, and noble. That many whose education and position in life would warrant our looking for better things, are culpably criminal on these points, is no excuse for your shortcomings. That women are often injured or wronged, through the holiest feelings, adds but a blacker dye to your meanness. Our rule is always safe: Treat every woman you meet as you would wish another man to treat your innocent, confiding sister.

HARVEST PROSPECTS.—The harvest prospects in all parts of Ireland continue to be of the brightest kind. The potatoes have passed over the first ten days of the period when the blight generally developed itself without any symptom of disease appearing.

THE orangemen in Ireland purpose having a grand demonstration on the occasion of the commemoration of the organization of the Order, in the vicinity of Belfast. It will be held on Monday, September 21, and is expected there will be an assemblage of at least 80,000.

A letter from Garibaldi himself, dated at Caprera, June 20th, speaks of his health as greatly improving.

MAILS FROM THE WRECKED "ANGLO-SAXON."—Along with the "Asia" mails which arrived here yesterday morning, were received thirteen mail-bags, brought from Halifax, containing chiefly newspapers recovered from the wreck of the "Anglo-Saxon." These bags included news-paper matter not only for Montreal, but for the Province generally, one bag being for Detroit. The papers, as may be supposed, from the length of time during which they had been exposed to the action of the water, were all but reduced to their original pulp, their addresses being, as a rule, either completely obliterated or rendered illegible. Where it has been possible to decypher the address, the paper has been forwarded by the Montreal Office to its destination. One of these bags was found to contain a large letter mail for Hamilton, and for the distributing dependent on that city. The letters in this mail having been originally tied together in tight packages, there will be little difficulty, after placing them through some drying process, in effecting their delivery, for the legibility of their addresses has been but slightly impaired. The registered letter packages for Hamilton were also found.—Montreal Herald.

METEOR.—A brilliant meteor was seen in New York on the 20th inst., about 10 P. M., moving in a north-westerly direction.

FALL IMPORTATIONS.

We solicit attention to the new Autumn Goods, now opening at MR. CLOUSTON'S Establishment in this Town. His Stock is large and complete, including every variety of Fancy and Staple Dry Goods. It is his intention to make continual additions to the stock during the Fall, so that his customers may be able to obtain in Peterborough the new designs and styles as they appear in the markets. RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.
BRYANT'S
PULMONIC WAFERS.
The most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult breathing, Sore throat &c., &c., &c.

THESE WAFERS give the most instantaneous and perfect relief and when persevered with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health who have tried other means in vain. To all clamors and all constitutions they are equally a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

To Vocalists and Public Speakers, these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional vocalists

All specimens entered for competition must have been grown by the Exhibitor, or have been his bona fide property for at least two months before the day of exhibition: and any Exhibitor violating this rule shall be incapacitated from competing for Prizes during the remainder of the year.

In all cases the exact number of specimens enumerated must be sent it.

All specimens entered for competition must be correctly named and labelled, and all flowering Plants must be in bloom at the time of exhibition.

The Judges are empowered to withhold a Prize from any class of specimens should none be exhibited, in their estimation, of sufficient merit.

The Judges are authorized to award a prize for any specimen of Flower, Fruit or Vegetable which, not being mentioned in the list, may, from peculiar excellence, appear to them deserving of a premium.

The Secretary will be in attendance at the Town Hall, on the morning of the Exhibition, from 9 to 12, to receive entries.

Members of the Society can only compete for prizes. The payment of One Dollar constitutes membership.

SELECT POETRY.

EVANGEL.

Sow, sow in the morning light,
Sow by the fall of the falling night;
Walk the field with an open hand,
Scattering seed over the loam and mud,
Never mind for raking need,
Every grain of the Master's seed.

Sow in the wild and desert plain,
Sow in the depths of the pathless main,
Sow over the waste of Arctic night,
Sow in the hot Simoom's blight,
Sowing, yet never hoping to see,
What the reward of the work may be.

Till the dear and parched ground,
Furrow the rough and stony mound,
Water the sultry globe by tears,
Labor and pray with trembling fears,
Rest not, labor thy life away
Sowing, tilling by night and day.

Preaching the world with an earnest heart,
Strive that no labor may love impart,
Toil for the peace of that stricken land,
Toil in the shadow of sorrow's land,
Lo! or, our subjects to see
When may the day of thy reckoning be.

Sow, sow and right onward keep,
Willing thy harvest another may reap,
Only contented to scatter the grain,
In the early dew and the latter rain;
And the harvest that springs from the labor of Shall ripen for thee in the garners above.

VARIETIES.

Fast men like fast rivers, are generally the shallowest.

There are two sorts of police—the detective and defective.

Begin life with but little and you may increase it afterward.

A philosopher resembles a cucumber—when most cut up he is perfectly cool.

A disappointed lover down east, lately hung himself with a string of beads.

The sunshine of life is made up of very few beams that are bright all the time.

He that knows useful things, and not he that knows many things, is the wise man.

There is no landing or, the shore of fidelity without sailing in the bark of fidelity.

The boy who lost his balance on the roof found it on the ground shortly afterwards.

"Don't borrow up my feeling," as the worm said when the plow was passing over him.

He who learns and makes no use of his learning, is a beast of burden with a load of books.

As we must make an account of every idle word, so must we likewise of our silence.

Among the advertisements in a late London paper, we read that "Two sisters want washing."

The man who ate his dinner with the fork of a river has been endeavoring to spin a mountain top.

Be contented and thankful; a cheerful spirit makes labour light, sleep sweet and all around cheerful.

Whose best works are most trampled upon? A shoemaker's because good shoes last longer than bad ones.

Whatis the difference between a washtub and a gas pipe? one is hollow tube and the other as a hollow tub.

Stories issuing from beautiful lips are like spiders crawling from the blushing scarf of a rose.

Look not mournfully into the past—it cannot return; wisely improve the present—it is thine; go forth and meet the shadowy future without fear, and with a manly heart.

On the marriage of Miss Wheat it was hoped that her path would be flowery and that she might never be thrashed.

"Mrs. Dadson, where's your husband?" "He's dying, ma'am, and I don't want any one to disturb him." A very considerate woman that.

The other day a man was found mounted on a ladder with his lips pressed to the telegraphic wires. He was kissing his wife in Philadelphia "by telegraphic."

"Sambo, why is a chimney sweep the happiest man alive?" "Cos he knows de jays ob de grosde." "No—try again Sambo." "Cos noone ob the ladies rich or poor, can do without him." "No—try again." "Gib it up." "Well, because he is always well soated (suited).

A fellow bound for New York, went aboard a boat, and almost breathless inquired:—

"What's the fare to New York?"

"Five dollars," was the reply.

"We'll I spose you'll eat me for that, won't you?"

"We'll find you in eating," said the captain.

"Well, capin 'spose'n I eat myself, what will you charge?"

THE SKEPTIC REFUTED.—"Ah," said a skeptical collegian to an old Quaker, "I suppose you are one of those fanatics who believe the Bible."

"I do believe the Bible: doth thee not believe it?"—"No; I have no proof of its truth."—"Then," it quired the old man, "does thee believe in France?" "Yes, for although I have not seen it I have seen others who have. Besides there is plenty of corroborative proof that such a country does exist." "Did thee ever see thy own brain?, "No." "Ever see a man who did see them?" "No." Does thee believe thee has any?" This last question put an end to the discussion.

JOSH BILLINGS TAKES A RISK.—I kum to the conclusion lately, that life was so onsertin, that the only way for me to stand a fair chance with other folks, was to git my life insured, and so I walked on the Agent ov the "Garden Angel, life insurance Co., and answered the following questions, which was put to me, ov the top ov a pair ov goold specks, by a shi little fat old feller, with a little round gray head, and az pretty a little belly on him, as enny man ever owned:—

QUESTIONS.

1st. Are yu mail or femail? If so, state how long yu hav been so.

2nd. Are yu subjec to fits, and if so, do you have more than one at a time?

3rd. What is your precise fiteing weight?

4. Did you ever have enny ancestors, and if so, how much?

5th. What is your legal opinion ov the constitushonality ov the 10 commandments?

6th. Do you ever have enny mite marex?

7th. Are yu married and single, or are yu a Bachelor?

8th. Do yu believe in a futer state, if yu do, state it?

9th. What are yure private contuments about a rush or rats to the head; can it be did successfully?

10th. Hav yu ever committed suicide, and if so, how did it seem to effect yu?

After answering the above qestions like a man, in the confirmatif, the silk little fat old feller with goold specks on, said I was insured for life, and proberbly wud remain so for a term of years.—I thanked him, and smiled ore ov my most pensive smiles.—The Ponghkeepsian.

THE ALBION.

Established in 1822.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, published every Saturday Morning, in the City of New York, and devoted to News, Politics and General Literature. This old-established and popular Periodical is now supplied to the public at the rate of

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM,

OR SIX CENTS WEEKLY.

The Albion has been widely known for forty years throughout the United States and British North America. Thoroughly independent in tone, it will be found to combine all the elements of Home Journalism, with due attention to every American incident that is likely to bear on British interests.

The Literary Department

will be enriched as heretofore, with the cream of English Literature. In connection with Art the ablest criticism will continue to be published in its columns. To these are added such Editorial Notices of current events as are deemed to be of interest to a circle of intelligent readers, whether British or American. The Albion furnishes, it is believed, a valuable weekly budget of information and entertainment.

THE ALBION ENGRAVINGS,

We have on hand copies of the Albion Engravings and subscribers and others can be furnished with them—at $2 each to subscribers and $3 to non-subscribers. A few proof copies of the Florence Nightingale print on India paper may be had. The following engravings are also on hand:

Claxton's Queen Victoria, Luca's Prince Albert, Allan's Sir Walter Scott, Stuart's Washington, Matteson Benjamin Franklin. Cope's First Trial by Jury, Buckler's St. Paul's London, Portrait of General Havelock, Herring's Three Members of the Temperance Society, The Castle of Ischia from Stanfield's Picture, Wandesford's Mary Queen of Scots. Landseer's Return from Hawking, Landseer's Dignity and Impudence, Landseer's Dear Pass, Dr. Kane at the Graves of Sir John Franklin's Men, Wilkies, Columbus propounding his Theory of a New World, and the Falls of Niagara from an original drawing made for the Albion.

Engravings can be safely forwarded by mail or express, on paste-board roller, at a charge of a few cents.

Money may be transmitted in registered letters at the risk of the publisher.

Subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces have to pay 26 cents per annum for American Postage.

EMPLOYMENT.

THE Undersigned has, for several years past, been engaged in a business, which has yielded him at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum, and is now willing to teach it to others. The business is of a highly useful and general character, adapted both to cities and villages, and one that any person of ordinary capacity, young or old, male or female, can acquire with a few hours' practice, and by which they can secure a very handsome income. Several young ladies who have received instructions from me, both in New York States and Pennsylvania, are earning upwards of $15 per week by it, and there is no reason why any one else cannot do the same. Invalids, even, can do well by it, as it is no peddling affair, but a business that is perfectly respectable. Gentleman and ladies of leisure who would like to learn the business for their own amusement or pleasure, will find the practice of it a pleasant pastime, and one that they will take great interest in. On receipt of $1, I will send printed instructions by which any person can readily acquire the art, and them instructions will also contain particular relative to the carrying it on so as to be highly profitable. The purchaser of these instructions will also be authorized to teach it to others; and I have sometimes received as high as $200, for teaching it personally to a single individual. I would state further that $3.50 or $3 will buy everything that is necessary to commence the business with, as the articles can be got almost anywhere, in any country, or if preferred, I can furnish them. FINKLE & LYON

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

538 Broadway, New York.

TO parties little acquainted with the Finkle & Lyon Sewing Machines the careful perusal of the Company's Circular is specially commended. This circular can be had on application. Its very specific, and will be found highly instructive, having been prepared without care and we will abide by all statements therein made.

The following brief quotation is characteristic of the entire Circular:

"This Machine is better adapted than any other Sewing Machine in market to the frequent changes and almost endless variety of sewing required in a family; for it will sew from one to twenty-six thickness of Muslin, without stopping, and make every stitch perfect. Will sew from the finest gauze to the heaviest cloth, and even the sleekest Harness leather, without changing the feed, needle or tension, or making any adjustment of machine whatever."

Thus have we successfully overcome the most difficult point in the Sewing Machine Art. It was no ordinary triumph. Defiantly can we now say, "No other Machine compares with it in this respect." Hence, have we unblushingly almost without exception taken the highest premium, wherever the Machine has been properly exhibited in competition with other first class Sewing Machines. Hence it is that we are able to offer the following guarantee, viz.; "We warrant every Machine we sell to give perfect satisfaction than any other Sewing Machine in the market, or money refunded." We never sell a Machine on any other terms. The guarantee is as reliable as the note of any business man in the land. For more than five years have we relied upon such facts for the reputation of our Machine; and without a single travelling agent in the field, there is scarcely a neighborhood on the continent where the Machine is not favourably known. We prefer such a reputation to one based upon mere "talking points," as they are technically called in the trade. Hence we make but one kind of stitch, viz., the lock-stitch, alike on both sides, requiring only one thread the finer of other kinds of stitches.

N. B.—Local Agents wanted in every county throughout the West. ☞ Special inducements offered.

THIS American is carrying the world by storm. Their five million boxes are sold annually. Composed entirely of Flowers, Herbs, Balsams and Extracts,—their effect on the human system is almost miraculous; safe, and successful,—acting directly on the blood. Purify and Renew the body.

their use is attended with the happiest effects. In sudden attacks of Hoarseness, one dose relieves always cures. In old standing cases of as horse, small doses are repeated frequently—to cleanse the system that good health is the result. No change in employment or diet is necessary. They never cause sore mouths, swelled gums or loose teeth, as do many other kinds. They are warranted to give satisfaction, or the money will be refunded. They are considered cheaper, safer, better, and in all respects superior to any purgative pill in the world.

☞ The discovery of restoring pill with sugar contained with Dr. Herrick. All others are counterfeits, and if used, will do harm, and destroy your health. Herrick's pills are elegantly put up, 20 in a box, with a large sheet of directions, and sell for 25 cents a box; 5 boxes for $1.

Herrick's Kid Strengthening Plaster.

THE GREAT STRENGTHENER AND PAIN DESTROYER. THE BEST AND CHEAPEST BACKACHOLD REMEDY IN THE WORLD.

These renowned Plasters cure pains, weakness and distress in the back, side and breast, in five hours. Apart from certain they do this, that for prompt and sure warrants them. Spread from rennet, balsams and gums, on beautiful kid leather, renders them peculiarly adapted to the wants of females and others. Their application is universal—suited to the strong man and the feeble woman and the delicate infant. To such and others will prove a balm and a blessing. They are agreeable and without odour. Each Plaster will wear from one to four months, and in case any one wears out sooner, upon sending the piece of the same or other with date of purchase, a new one will be forwarded free of charge. Price 25 cents each. Sold by druggists throughout the United States and North America, at wholesale by all large druggists in the principal cities.

Poetry.

TO MY MOTHER.

BY THE LATE REV. C. W. BETHUNE, D.D.

My mother, manhood's anxious brow
And sterner cares have long been mine,
Yet turn I to thee fondly now,
As when upon thy bosom's shrine
My infant griefs were gently hushed to rest,
And thy low-whispered prayers my slumber blessed.

I never call that gentle name,
My mother, but I am again
E'en as a child, the very same
That prattled at thy knee; and fain
Would I forget in momentary joy,
That I no more can be thy happy boy.

The artless boy, to whom thy smile
Was sunshine, and thy frown and night—
Though rare that frown, and brief the while
It veiled from me thy loving light—
For well conned task, ambitious highest bliss,
To win from thine approving lips a kiss.

I've loved through foreign lands to roam,
And gazed through many a classic scene;
Yet would the thought of that dear home
Which once was ours, oft intervene,
And bid me close again my weary eye
To think of thee and those sweet days gone by;

That pleasant home of fruits and flowers,
Where by the Hudson's verdant side
My sisters wove their jasmine bowers,
And he we loved at eventide,
Would hastening come from distant toil to bless,
Thine and His children's radiant happiness.

Alas the change! the rattling car
On flint-paved streets profanes the spot,
Where o'er the sod we sowed the Star
Of Bethlehem and Forget-me-not.
Oh, woe to mammon's desolating reign!
We ne'er shall find on earth a home again.

I've pored o'er many a yellow page
Of ancient wisdom, and have won,
Perchance, a scholar's name; but sage
Or bard have never taught thy son
Lessons so dear, so fraught with holy truth,
As those his mother's faith shed on his youth.

If by the Savior's grace made meet,
My god will own my life and love,
Methinks, when singing at his feet
Amid the ransomed throng above,
Thy name upon my glowing lips shall be,
And I will bless that grace for heaven and thee—

For thee and heaven; for thou didst tread
The way that leads me heavenward, and
My often wayward footsteps led
In the same path with patient hand;
And when I wandered far, thy earnest call
Restored my soul from sin's deceitful thrall.

I here thee blessed with earth
Fond ties and true; yet never deem
That I the less thy fondness prize:
No, mother; in my warmest dream
Of answered passion, through this heart of mine
One chord will vibrate to no name but thine.

Mother, thy name is widow. Well
I know no love of mine can fill
The waste place of thy heart, or dwell
Within the sacred recess; still
Lean on the faithful bosom of thy son,
My parent—thou art mine, my only one!

Miscellaneous.

HAVEN'T THE CHANGE.

It was house-cleaning time, and I had an old colored women at work scrubbing and cleaning paint.

'Polly is going ma'am,' said one of my domestics, as the twilight began to fall.

"Very well. Tell her that I shall want her to-morrow.'

'I think she would like to have her money for to-day's work,' said the girl.

I took out my purse, and found that I had nothing in it less than a three-dollar bill.

'How much does she have a day?'

'Six shillings, ma'am.'

'I haven't the change this evening.—Tell her that I'll pay for both days to-morrow.'

The girl left the room, and I thought no more of Polly for an hour. Tea-time had come and passed, when one of my domestics, who was rather communicative in her habits, said to me:

'I don't think old Polly liked your not paying her this evening.'

'She must be very unreasonable, then,' said I, without reflection. 'I sent her word that I had no change. How did she expect I could pay her?'

'Some people are queer, you know, Mrs. Graham,' remarked the girl who had made the communication, more for the pleasure of telling it than any thing else.

I kept thinking over what the girl had said, until other suggestions came into my mind.

'I wish I had sent and got a bill changed,' said I, as the idea that Polly might be really in want of money intruded itself. 'I would have been very little trouble.'

This was the begining of a new train of reflections, which did not make me very happy. To avoid a little trouble, I had sent the poor old woman away, after a hard day's work, without her money. That she stood in need of it was evident from the fact that she had asked for it.

'How very thoughtless, in me,' said I, as I dwelt longer and longer on the subject.

'What's the matter?' inquired my husband seeing me look serious.

'Nothing to be very much troubled at,' I inquired.

'Yet you are troubled.'

'I am; and cannot help it. You will perhaps, smile at me, but small causes sometimes produce much pain. Old Polly has been at work all day, scrubbing and cleaning. When night came, she asked for her wages, and I, instead of taking the trouble to get the money for her, sent her word that I hadn't the change. There was nothing less than a three dollar bill in my purse. I didn't reflect that a poor, old woman who has to go out to daily work must need her money as soon as it is earned. I am very sorry.

My husband did not reply for some time. My words appeared to have made considerable impression on his mind.

'Do you know where Polly lives?' he inquired at length.

'No; but I will ask the girl.' And immediately ringing the bell, I made inquiries as to where Polly lived; but no one in the house knew.

'It cannot be helped now,' said my husband, in a tone of regret. "But I would be more thoughtful in future. The poor always have need of their money. Their daily labor rarely does more than supply their daily wants. I can never forget a circumstance that occured when I was a boy. My mother was left a widow when I was nine years old—and she was poor. It was by the labour of her hands that she obtained food for herself and three little ones.

'Once, I remember the occurence as if it had taken place yesterday, we were out of money and food. At breakfast time our last morsel was eaten, and we went through the long day without a mouthful of bread. We all grew very hungry by night, but our mother encouraged us to be patient a little while longer, until she finished the garment she was making, when she would take that and some other work home to a lady who would pay her for the work. Then, she said, we should have a nice supper. At last the work was finished, and I went with my mother to help to carry it home, for she was weak and sickly, and even a light burden fatigued her. The lady for whom she had made the garment was in good circumstances, and had no want unmet that money could supply. When we came into her presence, she took the work, and, after glancing at it carelessly, said.

'It will do very well.'

'My mother lingered; perceiving which, the lady said, rather rudely.

'You want your money, I suppose.—How much does the work come to?'

'Two dollars,' replied my mother.—The lady took out her purse; and, after looking through a small parcel of bills, said.

'I haven't the change, this evening.—Call over any time, and you shall have it.'

'And without giving my mother time more earnestly to urge her request turned from us and left the room. I never shall forget the night that followed. My mother's feelings were sensitive and independent. She could not make known her want. An hour after our return home, she sat weeping with her children around her, when a neighbour came in and, learning our situation, supplied the present wants.

This relation did not make me feel any the more comfortable. Anxiously I waited, on the next morning, the arrival of Polly. As soon as she came I sent for her, and, handing her the money she had earned on the day before, said.

'I'm sorry I hadn't the change for you last night, Polly. I hope you didn't want it very badly.'

Polly hesitated a little, and then replied.

'Well, ma'am, I did want it very much, or I wouldn't have asked for it. My poor daughter, Hetty, is sick, and I wanted to get her something nice to eat.'

'I'm very sorry,' said I, with sincere regret. 'How is Hetty this morning?'

'She isn't so well ma'am. And I feel very bad about her.'

'Come up to me in half an hour, Polly,' said I.

The old woman went down stairs.—When she appeared again, according to my desire, I had a basket for her, in which were some little matters that I thought her daughter would relish, and told her to go at once and take them to the sick girl. Her expressions of gratitude touched my feelings deeply. Never since have I omitted, under any pretence, to pay the poor their wages as soon as earned.— T. S. Arthur.

Editing a Paper.

Editing a paper is a very pleasant business. If it contains too much political matter, people wont have it.

If it contains too little they wont have it.

If the type is large it don't contain enough reading matter.

If the type is small they can't read it.

If we publish telegraph reports folks say they are nothing but lies.

If we omit them they say we have no enterprise, or suppress them for political effect.

If we have in a few jokes, folks say we are nothing but a rattle-head.

If we omit jokes, they say we are an old fossil.

If we publish original matter, they blame us for not giving selections.

If we publish selections, folks say we are lazy for not writing more, and giving them what they have not read in some other paper.

If we give complimentary notices we are censured for being partial.

If we do not, all hands say we are a greedy hog.

If we attend church, they say it is only for effect.

If we do not, they denounce us as deceitful and desparately wicked.

If we remain in the office and attend to business, folks say we are too proud to mingle with our fellows.

If we go out, they say we never attend to business.

If we do not pay all bills promptly, folks say we are not to be trusted.

If we do pay promptly, they say we stole the money.

A BROAD HINT, RATHER.—An editor from the Hoosier state, says this is the style in which the fair ones in his vicinity, convey the hint to backward swains:

"Why don't you get married?" said a young lady, the other day, to a bachelor friend.

'I have been trying for the last ten years to find some one who would be silly enough to have me,' was the reply.

'I guess you haven't been up our way,' was the insinuating rejoinder.

A Talk about Wheat.

A few days since one of the best wheat growers of Monroe county was in our office, and the following conversation took place:

"How will wheat turn out this season?"

"Not as well as we expected. I have not yet threshed, but those who have say the yield is poor and the quality rather inferior. The weather has been so hot that the grain in some instances has shrivelled.'

'Has the midge done much damage?'

"There was plenty of midge sowed this season, but it was 'sectional.' On low lands, where the wheat was late, half the crop has been destroyed. But on the oak openings little damage has been sustained."

"What system of rotation do you adopt in the oak openings.'

"Sheep and wheat."

"Two very good things to go together. But how do you manage them?"

"We sow wheat every third year. It is seeded down with clover. I laster is sown on the wheat in the spring, a bushel per acre, about the time of sowing the seed. It does not benefit the wheat, but increases a better catch of clover."

"Do you sow any timothy?"

"Not on wheat land. On land which we intend to mow for some years we sow timothy and clover, but not on the land I am speaking of.'

"Well, after the wheat is off, what do you do?"

"We do nothing. Let the clover grow till it is quite large the next season, and then turn in sheep. They will eat the leaves and tred down the clover stalks. These make manure. The next year pasture as you please, and after corn planting break up the land, and fallow for wheat again."

"Do you plow more than once. In Wheat land they do not?"

"I know they don't but I do. After breaking it up, we harrow and cultivate to keep down the weeds, and about this time, (August,) we cross plow and afterwards harrow as needed. This is all that we do till the seed is drilled in."

"If the land is clear," he continued, "you need not break up till later. But when I want to seed down again. I like to break early and cross plow."

This system of growing clover and wheat, eating off the clover on the land with sheep, keeps up the fertility of the soil. The latter, by becoming too rich for wheat. And in that case he takes off a crop of clover hay.

Fortunately the system was to plow under a heavy crop of clover in June or July, and thus grow a crop of wheat every other year. Sheep and wheat he considers much more profitable.

Of course this system cannot be adopted on all the land on the farm. There must be some portions left for hay and other crops.—Genesee Farmer.

WOOL.—We have just been to two of the principal wool establishments in this city. Nothing is doing. One of the proprietors has gone a fishing, and the other is probably enjoying himself in his garden. They made so much money last year that they can afford to take things easy. On the other hand, the farmers are in no hurry to sell. Last year those who held on to their wool realized 10 to 20 cents per pound more than if they had sold soon after clipping. They are determined this year to get the full money value of the wool. Now and then a farmer brings a small clip to market, and sells it for what the dealers are willing to pay. Prices here range from 45 to 55 cents—the latter for wool of extra quality. In New York sales have recently been made of domestic wool at from 65 to 75 cents per pound, and one would think from these figures that prices should be higher than they are here.

We understand that several American dealers are in Canada buying wool. We do not know what they pay, but "washed Canadinn" is quoted in New York at 60 cents. In Canada money this would be about 47 cents.—Gennesse Farmer.

The 30th Regiment are under marching orders for Montreal. The instructions were received from headquarters, and it is expected the regiment will leave Toronto on or about the 6th of September. They will be relieved by the 16th regiment from Montreal. The "Prince Consort's Own," now stationed at Hamilten, have been expecting their removal to Toronto, and will be disappointed. We dare say the young ladies of Toronto will be pleased with the fact that a new regiment is coming. All the marrying men of the 30th having been already "caught," they will welcome a relay. It will be like beating a fresh preserve to a sportsman. The only drawback is, that, perhaps, the Montreal ladies have brought down all the birds worth powder and shot.

Unacceptable Gratitude.

Lieutenant J——e, late of the Sixteenth Regiment, was, a few days ago, walking down Main Street, Utica, when he was accosted by a fellow, half soldier, half beggar, with a most reverential military salute:

"God bless your honor," said the man, whose accent betrayed him to be Irish, "and long life to you."

"How do you know me?" said the lieutenant.

"Is it how do I know your honor? responded Pat. "Good right, sure, I have to know the man who saved my life in battle."

The lieutenant, highly gratified at this tribute to his valor, slid a fifty cent bill into his hand, and asked him when.

"God bless your honor, and long life to you," said the grateful veteran. "Sure it was at Antietam, [when, seeing your honor run away as fast as your legs could carry you from the rebels, I followed your lead, and ran after you out of the way; whereby under God I saved my life. Oh! good luck to your honor, I never will forget it to you."

Perilous Adventure.

DESPERATE COURAGE OF A LADY.

The Alta Californian narrates an instance of perilous adventure and remarkable courage of a lady formerly from this vicinity, and the story has been confirmed by a private letter from a sister of the lady written from Denver City to her friends in this city.

The heroine is Mrs. Garrish, formerly Miss Fanny Miles, daughter of Mr. A. H. Miles, who some years since lived in Newburg, but who has moved his family to Denver City.

The husband of the lady lives in Oregon, and she was on her way to rejoin him after a visit to her friends in the Atlantic States. About the middle of May, she, with her baby, were travelling in the Overland Mail stage-coach, between Denver and San Francisco. The only persons composing the party were herself and baby inside the coach, and one passenger and the driver on the front seat.

About eight miles out from Carson Station, the stage was attacked by Indians, who fired into it, killing the two men on the outside. The passenger fell off the coach, but the driver tumbled on the seat, quite dead, but retaining his hold on the lines and whip.

The horses dashed off wildly, and the Indians continued to fire at the coach, the bullets passing through and through it, but providentially not touching Mrs. Garrish or her child. With extraordinary courage and self-possession Mrs. Garrish hid the child under the seat, covering it up with cushions to protect it from the bullets. Then she crawled out of the coach on to the driver's seat—though how this was safely accomplished amid the whistling of bullets and the mad plunging of frightened horses, seems mysterious. Taking the reins and whip from the cold and stiffened hand of the dead driver, she got the horses under control, and drove them about a mile, when one of them fell dead from loss of blood.

Here seemed a crisis in her fate. Jumping down from the seat she commenced to loose one of the surviving horses, with the purpose of mounting it and galloping off with her baby. She had nearly accomplished her task when the Eastern coach came up over the hill, and the driver, seeing the struggling horses and a woman among them, whipped up his team and drove rapidly to her relief.

The coach that came up was full of men, and the Indians retreated. Never was help so much she had come. There she begged the agent to send her forward with an escort, but he did not dare to do it, as it was against positive orders. Finding, after a while, that she was the wife of a Free Mason, the agent, who was himself a Mason, said he would give her a proper escort if he swung for it, and thus she reached San Francisco in safety, and afterwards joined her husband in Oregon.

Emancipation in Russia.

(From the N. Y. Tribune)

The endeavours of the Government to educate the former serfs for a kind of a self-government appear to be eminently successful. The peasants elect themselves the heads of the villages, and these correspond with the authorities. These heads assemble twice a month to settle disputes between the peasants. Then the Government have appointed throughout Russia 1,600 honorary magistrates to settle disputes between the peasants and proprietors, and more than one of the latter have discovered that the time when their serfs were entirely at their mercy has passed away.

Together with the social improvement of the country, education is progressing. More than 8,000 have been opened for the peasants, and everywhere they are anxious to read, as they feel that they ought to be allowed to read the laws by which they are governed.

It is already apparent that it is not the peasant alone who are benefited by the emancipation ordinance, but that the proprietors gain as much, at least morally. Unless they are willing to be impoverished they will find it necessary to quit a life of idleness and instead of relying blindly upon a steward, to superintend their estates themselves.

Thus Emancipation will give to Russia what it needed so much—a powerful impulse to increase political activity. It is already leading to other reforms, and preparing the way for a constitutional form of government.

It is only a few years since the Emancipation scheme was prepared; but it already has secured a place in history among the greatest and most beneficent events in the progress of the Russian people, and it has enrolled those who took a leading part in conceiving and executing the measures among the acknowledged benefactors of their country. The liberal press of the entire civilized world has already spoken with sufficient unanimity on our struggle to render it certain that the Abolition and the Abolitionists of American Slavery will gain a no less honorable place upon the page of history than that already given to Russian Emancipation and Emancipationists.

LIFT ME HIGHER.—A girl, thirteen years, old, was dying. Lifting her eyes toward the ceiling said, softly,

'Lift me higher! lift me higher!'

Her parents raised her up with pillows, but she faintly said,

'No, not that! but there!' again looking earnestly toward Heaven whither her happy soul flew a few minutes later. On her gravestone these words are now carved:

'Jane B——, aged thirteen. Lifted higher.'

A beautiful idea of dying, was it not? Lifted higher!

A half-blood Alderney heifer belonging to Cyrus Knight, of East Hartford, Conn., gave birth to a calf when one year and twenty-four days old. Mother and calf are as well as could be expected.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER, 3 1863.

As a change is contemplated in the proprietary of the EXAMINER, it is absolutely necessary that all debts due the establishment should be paid by the 1st of October next.

We hope therefore that persons indebted will be prompt to pay up.

GRAND TRUNK CHARGES.

The Opposition are, apparently, determined to leave no means untried, however dishonorable, to oust or embarrass the present Ministry. Now the attempt is to excite the fears of the people by Yankee invasion; now by hints of treasonable correspondence, and secret conspiracies in their midst; and then again, when all these fail, by bringing false charges and accusations against the Government. The last dodge is the effort made to fasten on the Government the odium of offering to bribe the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the sake of their influence in election matters. The Montreal Gazette came out with positive statements that the Ministry had made certain corrupt offers to the Company, with the express understanding that the Company should use their influence on behalf of the Government candidates in the Montreal elections; and that the Company with their characteristic, honor, and unpurchaseableness, had indignantly refused to accede to the terms. The Gazette called upon Mr. Ferrier and Mr. Brydges to substantiate its statements. Accordingly, in the next issue of that veracious sheet, appeared letters from these gentlemen, which, though intended to bolster up the charges of the Gazette, have had the very contrary effect. The whole matter has been completely sifted in the House, and the Ministry have come out clear. In fact, no offers at all were made by the Government to the Company. Previous to the breaking up of the late Parliament, it seems the Ministry had come to the determination of giving the Company the sum of $150 per mile—this to include side service, the payment of mail conductors, &c. But before anything could be done, Parliament was dissolved, and a meantime took place. The new Ministers thought that pending their appeal to the country, the result of which would show whether or not they enjoyed the confidence of the people, it would not be right—as they could not constitutionally do so—to interfere in matters of importance. This doctrine proved distasteful to the Grand Trunk people. They urged upon the Ministry an immediate settlement of the matter. But the Government was firm in its refusal, but at the same time admitted that the matter should be settled with the least possible delay. In the meanwhile the Grand Trunk influence was being used to defeat the Government candidates. Mr. Brydges and Mr. Ferrier were remonstrated with by the Premier on the conduct of the Company in thus using their influence against the Government at the elections, especially when they were so urgently pressing the Government for a settlement. Their influence was not asked in the behalf of the Government at this or any other time; they were only requested to remain neutral.

The following telegram from Mr. Brydges to Mr. Ferrier, which the Gazette suppressed—speaks for itself. Mark the stand and deliver style, "If the Government are prepared to settle with us at $150 per mile, with a contract for three years from now, dating the settlement back from the date of Sidney Smith's report, I will be perfectly neutral in the election in Montreal West; but I will not undertake to be more than to be neutral. This is settled the whole business. If the Government will accede to the demands of the Company, then the Company will be quiet; if not, the Government must expect their opposition. The Government was not intimidated; no opinion was taken of the bid or threat—whichever it may be considered. The consequence was, the Company did use their utmost influence in Montreal West to defeat the Government candidate. No one supposes that if the Reformists had returned to power, these disadvantages would ever have been made.

THE people of the country should watch closely the proceedings of the Legislature, and so post themselves in the various matters of debate that are brought up from time to time, that they may be able to trust more to their own judgment, and less to the statements of interested parties at election times. How often does it happen that some reckless, unprincipled trickster, by means of fine sayings and bold assertions and statements which he knows his hearers are not in a position to refute, deny or contradict, is able to effect the selfish ends he has in view. This would not be if the "papers" were as extensively circulated and as carefully read as they ought to be in these stirring times. We believe the time has come when people should pay more attention to the moral character of candidates, and the antecedents of private life, than has, hitherto, been the case "Measures not men," should be the motto after election—as far as practicable; but "Men and measures," would be a good motto before elections. A man who intentionally deceives once, or who prostitutes the public position he may occupy, to the accomplishment of selfish ends, should not be trusted again.

McGEE.

No one denies that Mr. McGee has great natural abilities, and that these are highly polished and cultivated by education; but it not unfrequently happens, indeed, it is very often the case, that there is something wanting, a screw loose, as it were, in the mental machinery of those possessing susceptible highly or poetic organizations, or intellects above the average. Johnson, Tasso, Dryden, Savage, Goldsmith, and a host of names, might be mentioned to prove this, but it is not necessary. Mr. McGee is no exception to the rule. He may be a very good poet, and is, no doubt, a distinguished writer, and an eloquent orator; but these accomplishments in Mr. McGee are not accompanied with that shrewd common sense, and that strong practical ability that are necessary in the statesman or the successful man of business. In fact, we believe it to be conceded that Mr. McGee is altogether devoid of that quality commonly known as practical talent. He is a visionary; his strong and vivid imagination, when it once seizes upon a thing, however trivial in itself, magnifies it into an affair of a great moment and importance. Witness his bold and positive statements, that he knew on the best authority that the Americans were preparing to invade Canada. When the truth came out, all his magnificent statements were found upon some idle remarks let fall by an American at a dinner table—where several Americans and Canadians were seated—to the effect, that he had heard another individual say, that another person had told him, that some official at Washington had told him, that if (mark the IF) there were ever war again with Canada, Montreal would be a good way to invade Canada. We suppose the moment the statement was made it was forgotten. How often such half boastful statements are playfully made, when persons of different nationalities get around a good dinner table, and are enjoying themselves—in praising up their own countries—without anything more being thought of them. The American papers are making merry over the matter, and poking fun at D'Arcy in every imaginable way. Well they may. D'Arcy and his antecedents are no strangers to them. They knew him when he was not such a strong monarchist as he now boasts himself to be. Mr. McGee's defection to the Reform party, contemptible as the cause of it, is not a thing to be wondered at as much as Mr. Foley's. Consistency is a thing Mr. McGee is a stranger to, and fickleness and vacillation are characteristics of his nature. We think that Mr. McGee's stories should, hereafter, be received with a "respectable" degree of care and caution.

POOR FOLEY!

How fallen is poor Foley from his former Estate! A Catspaw in the hands of his former foes, and despised by his former friends he occupies no enviable position. Who forgets the five or six hours he spent some couple of years ago in the Court House in this place, in abandoning and exposing the corruption and baseness of those into whose arms he has now, apparently, thrown himself? He may imagine that he is, by his conduct, spiting the Premier or somebody else; but we opine he will find that he is (to use a vulgar phrase) cutting his own throat. Already have steps been taken in the county which he represents, to let him know how his conduct is looked upon by his constituents. Even the journal which has, hitherto, been considered in a peculiar sense, his organ, has come out with an article animadverting strongly upon his apostacy to the Reform cause. This article is nothing but a reflex of public opinion. It is only what could be expected. Mr. Foley, before his election, it is true, did not conceal that he had serious differences with the Ministry; but he never for a moment hinted that he would let personal considerations or griefs interfere with his duties in the House, or cause him to oppose the Ministry;—whose policy, he stated, so far as it was known to him, met his approval, and would have his support. He has given the lie to all his former professions, and, we believe, that he will discover, if he do does not repent before it is too late, that he has about run the length of his political tether.

FAIR-DAY.

Tuesday was Fair-day, and, as usual, a large number of persons were in from the country to do "business" and see the sights. The young people of the country, judging from the crowds that came to town, and from the manner in which they seemed to enjoy themselves, must look forward to the recurring Fair-day with very pleasant feelings. We hope the "start" given on Tuesday will, in some degree, break up the "stagnation" of business that has been existing for some time. The storekeepers like to see "good houses." Perhaps, by the way, they would be more apt to do so, if they would let the people more generally know what they have got to sell and how cheaply they are prepared to sell. We are happy to say the last Fair-day was a marked improvement upon many of its predecessors—in the way of quietness, &c., no rows or disturbances having occurred—at least, so far as we have been able to ascertain.

ADVERTISING.

Merchants complain of dull times; well the times are pretty dull. But what merchants have the dullest times? We guarantee those who advertise the least have the dullest times. So they ought. This is the day of advertising, and those who mind the great competition existing—expect to make a business and keep one, will soon find their mistake. Every merchant should set apart, each year, a certain portion of his income for advertising purposes. Depend upon it, both income and the advertising portion would soon greatly increase. The experiment might easily be tried, without much cost or trouble. Stores that advertise their wares most, have generally the best wares to advertise. The owners believe in the motto: Small profits and quick returns.

IS IT RIGHT.

Is it right that a man should be approved or condemned simply because he does or does not belong to "our" party! We trow not. Is it right that we should feel ourselves bound to give our unqualified approval to a man's acts, merely because he professes the same political opinions we do, when we feel convinced these acts are neither beneficial in their effects nor stamped with the impress of principle? We trow not. Is it right we should condemn and denounce acts which we know to be good ones just because they originate in and have been perfected by a political opponent? We trow not. But unfortunately not a few differ from us in these respects. There are those who seem to think that party names and party crotchets, and party prospects have more claims upon them than a regard for right, fair play, principle, and the best interests of community; and what they think they act out to perfection. Hear they of a measure, the first question they ask is not "what are its aims," "it's adaptability to the present circumstances of the County," or "its likelihood of doing prospective good," but "who is its author," or "what party brought it in." If to their party its paternity belongs, loud are their praises on its behalf; it is just the very thing that is imperatively demanded. But if it does not belong to their party their terms of disapproval and denunciation are of the loudest and strongest character imaginable. The real nature, scope and aims of the object of their denunciations or laudations they know nothing about and never inquire into. This is wrong. It exerts pernicious influences; it is subversive of everything fair and upright, it stifles free thought and free inquiry; it debars a man from thinking for himself and acting upon his own convictions; under the guise of liberty it makes a man the veriest slave,—the blind, bigotted, subservient slave of faction and demagogueism.

What we say is true. Who can contradict it? We say that such conduct is wrong.—We are sure the reflective and good will agree with us and deprecate it as much as we do.—Let "measures not men" be the motto adopted, and a better state of things will prevail; "isms" will be less regarded; noisy, needy politicians, less heeded; and praise or censure, as the case may be, more frequently awarded "where and when it is due."

A By-law to provide for levying and collecting the following sums on the several School Sections of the Municipality, for scholastic purposes, viz.: On Section No. 1, $80; No. 2, $136; No. 3, $140; No. 4, $180; No. 5, $120; No. 6, $150; No. 7, $160; No. 8, $120; No. 9, $200; No. 10, $150; and No. 11, $72.

A By-law to provide for the expenditure of $440 in the general improvements of Roads in the Municipality; said sum to be divided in the following manner, viz.: to Wards Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, $85 each; and to Ward No. 5, $100.

A By-law to close up the original allowance for road in the rear of the east half of Lot No. 7, in the 5th Concession of Smith, and to vest the same in George Paul.

A By-law to establish a road through Lot No. 7, in the 5th Concession of Smith.

A By-law to close up part of an allowance for road between lots Nos. 16 and 17 in the 9th Concession of Smith, and vest the same in Matthew Bell and John Lunster.

A By-law to close up part of the original allowance for road between lots No. 24 and 25 in the 9th Concession of Smith, and vest the same in Isaac Garbutt.

A By-law to close up part of the original allowance for road in the rear of lot No. 28 in the 7th Concession of Smith, and vest the same in Samuel Strickland.

A By-law to establish a line of road through part of the south half of lot No. 1, east of the Communication Road, Smith.

A By-law to close up part of the original allowance for road in the rear of the south half of lot No. 1, east of the Communication Road, Smith, and to vest the same in John R. Benson.

A petition was received and read from the rate-payers of the Township of Harvey, praying that a road be opened between lots 21 and 22, through the 17th, 18th and 19th Concessions of that Township.

The Reeve was directed to issue his order on the Treasurer for the sum of $5, in favor of Francis Staples, an indigent person.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—The Dundas Courier says, that on Tuesday, 25th ultimo, three children belonging to Mr. Henry Nash, had got on the track, and were playing on one of the culvert bridges, when the express train from the East came along. The engineer did not discover them until within 200 yards of them, owing to a hollow in the road at this point. As soon as he distinguished them, he gave the signal to "put on brakes," and reversed the engine. The eldest of the three succeeded in getting clear of the track; the cow-catcher struck the youngest, who was between two and three years of age, killing her instantly; her sister, only a year and a-half older, had the toes of her right foot completely severed, and the cap of her knee smashed.

GARIBALDI'S proclamation to the Venetian Committee of Action is now the talk of the day. With the recovery of his health the general has turned to his old style, both of thought and language, with this notable difference, that the name of the King, which heretofore held a conspicuous place in all the productions of Garibaldi's pen, is here totally forgotten. This appeal for an insurrection in Venetia, and the promises of assistance, are regarded as the warnings of some new movement during the autumnal months.

Affairs at the Capital.

[QUEBEC CORRESPONDENCE.]

QUEBEC, August 29th, 1863.

Last night, precisely at midnight, the vote on the amendment prepared by Mr. Sicotte was taken, and lost by a majority of 63 to 60—leaving the Ministry with the narrow majority of three. It was reported yesterday that the majority would be larger, what the result of this vote may be is uncertain—further than it must be increased to keep the present men in power.

The discussion though prolonged, has not been characterised for bitterness—occasionally some of the smaller fry—who have no other means of bringing themselves into notice but by their impertinence, make a dash, and are suddenly brought up with a round turn, which silences them for the next ten days. After the disposal of the amendment—the House proceeded with the address—when two others were offered; the first by Mr. Currier of Ottawa, in reference to the Seat of Government—the other by Mr. T. R. Ferguson, on the great Representation question, which was lost by an immense majority. The other was withdrawn after the Ministerial explanations were given. Dorion followed at great length, denying that the propositions came from them. The Attorney General then rose and debate continued until late on Tuesday morning, on the amendment offered by Mr. Currier, which had the effect of drawing out the Premier on the question of the removal to Toronto.

BATTALION DRILL.

Tuesday afternoon having been appointed for Battalion drill, the companies of Peterboro, Ashburnham and Lakefield assembled on the cricket ground, Ashburnham, for that purpose.

The force consisted of Capt. Poole's Rifle Company, Peterboro'; Capt. Kennedy's Infantry do.; Capt. Roger's do. do., Ashburnham; and Capt. Leigh's do., Lakefield; numbering in all about one hundred and twenty men.

They were put through some battalion movements such as marching past, skirmishing, forming supports, &c. by Brigade Major Patterson, who expressed himself very much pleased with the spirit manifested by the men in turning out so well and at the proficiency they had made in their drill.

The companies, after drilling two or three hours, paraded the streets to their respective armories, where they were dismissed.

The next batallion drill is appointed for the 25th, the last Friday in the month, to which all the men should turn out, in view of the grand display to come off at Port Hope on the 7th of October.

WE are requested to state that the adjourned meeting of the Skating Club, will be held this Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, in the Town Hall. The report of the committee will be read and a constitution submitted to the meeting for approval, we therefore hope members generally will attend.

THE OIL MARKET.—The Oil Springs Oil Circular says:—[illegible] still continues, and the price has advanced to $5 per barrel, cash, with $5.50 and $6 in some cases determined to-day. The daily yield is about 150 barrels from all sources. Refined is held at 50 cents per gallon for first quality, with one sale of 20 barrels only, at that price.

NEW PEER.—Another addition to the Peerage is talked of. The gentleman selected for the honor is said to be the Right Hon. Henry Herbert, the member for Kerry County.

The Ottawa Members.

The Aylmer Times remarks strongly on the course of the Ottawa members:

"The member for Ottawa County positively declared that the opposition "reckoned without their host" when they counted on him, which agrees well with his first vote in the house. The member for Ottawa City was unquestionably elected to give a support to the Government, with which his first vote well accords. The member for Russell, always professing Reform views, when unjustly deprived of his seat for Ottawa City, forgave the base injustice done him, and went into the Tory camp—and he still backs the corruptionists. Or, are they so thoroughly in the hands of the Grand Trunk Company that they dare not but vote back the creatures who have thrown our best interests aside to fill up that all devouring grave? In either case, their conduct is most unaccountable. Of course, they have forgotten that the destiny of Central Canada is intrusted so far in their hands, and that to provoke the hostility of the powerful western men, is to write that destiny in doom. The present Government is sufficiently strong to dispense with their aid, Central Canada may feel humiliated. Its policy has risen so higher than mere local interests, and now its members by the most unaccountable infatuation, have basely sacrificed those interests, and blighted in the bud the rising hopes of the Ottawa country."

The Ottawa Union, which reproduces the above says:

"We hope our city member has by this seen the error of his ways, and on the Address will give his support to the government. This will be more in accordance with the views of his strongest supporters in this city, who feel quite dissatisfied at the stand he has thought fit to take."

JOHN MORGAN.—This worthy still remains in confinement in the Penitentiary at Columbus. It is now stated that all the valuable articles found on Morgan at the time of his capture, was $23 and a butternut breast-pin.

There are sixty-eight of Morgan's officers in the prison. They occupy the south side of the new hall, each end of which is temporarily closed. They are locked up separately in cells at 7 o'clock in the evening, and are unlocked at about 7 in the morning. They enjoy the privilege of walking the hall through the day, which is, perhaps, 150 feet long and 12 wide. At 8 A. M., and 3 P. M., they are conducted to the common dining-hall, and have prison fare, with the addition of coffee and sugar, and some few articles furnished by themselves.

Morgan and his men are all shaved and trimmed, in accordance with the rules of the institution, to secure personal cleanliness, and to give a uniform appearance to the prisoners, so that detection would be more easy in case of an attempt to escape. It is said John chafes considerably over his imprisonment.

Mr. Foley and his Old Friends.

The Stratford Beacon, hitherto a staunch friend of Mr. Foley, speaks out in relation to his present position:

"The Hon. Mr. Foley has made his bed with the enemies of Reform. This event was not altogether unlooked for, but it has come sooner than was anticipated, after the declaration he made at the Stirton Dinner. The people of Waterloo, when they elected the hon. gentleman, little anticipated that they were electing one who would so completely betray their interests. Two years ago Mr F. stood at the top of the political ladder. He was the choice of two of the wealthiest constituencies in Western Canada, and both were clamorous, and even jealous, for the honour of securing his services. If there were an election to-morrow in either of them, he would fail to receive a respectable minority, or perhaps even a nomination, in either county. Mr. F.'s "cup of prosperity" was too full to be carried without spilling, and this is solely the result of an ill-advised step. His apology for voting for the Speaker was unworthy a gentleman of his position, and his plea for voting against the motion for the admission of Mr. Rankin into the House has unveiled the personal spleen which actuates him towards his late colleagues."

The Perth Reformer also brings the member for North Waterloo a warning:

"Mr. Foley should look before he leaps. Mr. Sicotte can, like any other Lower Canadian politician—a few excepted—coalesce with any set of men. Mr. Foley cannot do this, therefore self-interest, if no higher motive, should show him the necessity of doing nothing rashly. Mr. Foley should see that the present Government is strong in Upper Canada. In degree of strength here, it is without a parallel. In moving an amendment to the address he is attempting its defeat by a Lower Canada majority. Should he succeed in achieving that defeat he would be in a position, possibly, to rule us by that majority. He would look well at this business.'

A Reconstruction Probable.

We rejoice at the success of the Government in carrying the Address, because it almost precludes the possibility of the return to power of Galt, Cartier and John A. Macdonald. The strength of the present Ministry has been put to the severest test. By the strenuous efforts of the Opposition in the House, aided by powerful assistance from without, every doubtful member has been won over. The hopes of reward under the prospective lavish Government of Galt, Cartier, and John A. Macdonald, have been stronger than what a reforming, economical Administration could offer, and the loose-fish have generally gone over to the Opposition. Yet the Government has a clear majority of the votes of the whole House, with a prospect of gradually obtaining greater strength. It is impossible to conceal from Ministers themselves, and would be improper to hide from the public, however, that their present majority is far too small to permit of the Government proceeding with the business of the country with the force and celerity which the situation requires. The measures of taxation and of reform imperatively demand cannot be carried by a weak Government, and they cannot be postponed till time brings strength. Moreover, it must be admitted that it is not desirable that the Government should rule one section of the Province by the votes of the other. True it has been done by our opponents, and we cannot say that it ought not to be done, if [illegible] required it. But it is desirable to avoid such a cause of things, and every exertion should be used to bring the majority of the two sections into harmony with each other. We have no doubt that success will attend the efforts of the Government in that direction. At all events, they ought to be made. We desire to bring Lower Canada to a sense of the evil and injustice they have already inflicted on Upper Canada, and the necessity which exists for removing all danger of a recurrence of the evil by a re-arrangement of the relations of the two Provinces. We shall be the better able to accomplish our purpose if we show a desire to avoid interfering with the local affairs of Lower Canada, a readiness to act with whoever the people of that section choose to represent them, provided they are not corrupt or incapable.—We have no desire to rule the Lower Canadians as they ruled us, by a sectional majority, and shall rejoice if the two majorities can agree to carry on the business of the country in harmony.—Globe.

Fearful Scene at an Execution.

On Tuesday morning, August 4th, about half past eight o'clock, Charles McCormack who had been convicted at the last assizes for the murder of a young man named Michael Beglan, at Drainbridge, on the 21st of November, suffered the last penalty of the law in front of the Longford gaol. The cap having been previously drawn over his eyes, he walked forward with a firm step on the drop. The rope having been adjusted, the executioner with disgusting solicitude, called with a loud voice to those who stood near the doomed and the dying to "stand clear of the drop" The wretch himself withdrew, and there stood Charles McCormack alone. After a fearful pause of about a minute, which seemed an hour, the body of the unfortunate man fell heavily and disappeared from the view of the crowd behind the constabulary who guarded the approach to the gaol. What a sight of appalling horror now presented itself! The rope being too long, the stretched man fell on his knees on the steps in front of the entrance to the gaol. Patience and half [illegible] he strove to rise to his feet and as he writhed about, the attention of the executioner was directed to the spectacle calculated to make the life-blood freeze in the heart. Two of the constabularly fainted at the soul-sickening sight, and all within now closed their eyes in horror. The mode by which the executioner mended his blunder was even more terrible. The wretched man was winched up by the neck until his feet were clear of the steps, and then he was left suspended in fearful convulsions fully three minutes, till death, apparently by strangulation, put an end to the poor wretch's bitter sufferings. The body having hung for 40 minutes, was lowered into a coffin placed on the steps, and the rope having been cut by the executioner, the two brothers and the uncle of the deceased came forward and wept bitterly as they placed the lid on the remains of him who had just paid a terrible penalty for his crime.

NAVAGATING THE AIR.—Some remarkable experiments have lately been made in the art of navigating the air in the rooms of Nadar, the renowned photographist of Paris. Godard, the celebrated aeronaut, has associated himself with Nadar, and a monster balloon to be made of 13,000 yds. of silk, has been ordered to be finished by the 5th of September—when it is to ascend with eighty persons for a week's voyage for an aerial excursion. The experiment is to take place at Baden Baden, or rather, I should say, the port of departure is to be at that place.

Great Robbery of an Express Company in St. Louis.

THE PERPETRATORS GETS CLEAR WITH $70,000 BOOTY.

From the Detroit Free Press.

The following are the particulars of the great express robbery. At about two o'clock this morning, policemen Moore and Smith, and private watchman, Wightman, discovered that the front or Fourth street door of the United States express Company's office was open. The gas, as usual, burning inside. Owing to the warmth of the night, the windows on St. Charles street had been left open.

The officers entered, and found the clerk lying almost insensible and in an apparently suffering condition, upon his bed, in the middle of the large front hall. Near him were a gutta percha bottle, containing chloroform, three sponges, and at his head a piece of cotton cloth, that evidently had been saturated with chloroform. At a distance of a few rods stood the Express Company's money safe, with its door open, and after the lapse of a considerable interval, the clerk was partially aroused; his muscles seemed at first singularly rigid, and his situation rather alarming. In the back room, on his couch, lay the partner asleep, with a fourth sponge near his face. He was awakened without much difficulty. The safe was found to have been robbed of the entire contents of a tin box, in which had been placed packages of various amounts between fifty and sixty thousand dollars designed to go by the North Missouri train. A considerable number of other packages not placed in the tin box and a quantity of gold coin were left untouched. In the safe was the clerk's pistol.

The rogue, or rogues, for it is probable there were two, evidently entered by one of the windows on St. Clair street, they then administered chloroform to the clerk and porter, and took from beneath the pillow of the former his pistol and the keys of the safe. From a shelf near the safe they took a small crank or leaver, which had always to be used to prepare the lock for the key.

This fact shows that the burglars either were very much skilled in the matter of safes in general, or had become particularly posted as to this individual safe. They shrewdly left the empty tin box behind, and passed out by the Forth street door, the key to which hung up at one side of it. The chloroform bottle will contain eight ounces, and had three ounces of chloroform left in it indicating that five had been used.

Later from Lawrence.

LEAVENWORTH, August 21.

The latest intelligence from Lawrence is to eleven o'clock this morning, at which time Quantrell had his men drawn up on the south side of the city, preparatory to leaving. There can be no doubt that a large number of the best citizens of the town have been shot on the street. We have names of several prominent men who are reported killed, but as the reports cannot be traced to a reliable source, we refrain from giving them.

A note was received here this evening, from F. B. Swift, asking the citizens of Leavenworth to send physicians, with instruments and medicines, immediately; that the doctors in Lawrence are out of all kinds of medical supplies, and stating that the town had been burned, and from forty to sixty persons shot.

The Treasonable Correspondence.

"As was to be expected, the New York papers deny the existence of a treasonable correspondence, the object of which was to invite an invasion of Canada by the Lincoln dynasty, and in which certain persons in this country are implicated. This denial does not in the least shake our faith in the correctness of the statement, that such a correspondence has passed; and we are quite willing to wait till the facts fully develop themselves, in order that it may be seen where the truth lies. When we made our first statement we had not heard any of the names of the conspirators mentioned, but since that rumour has been busy, in this city, in their indentification. We forbear, however, to report the names freely mentioned upon the street."

A very poor way for getting out of a very shameful scrape. The Leader invented or repeated a gross falsehood, and told the Government that Mr. Archibald the British Consul at New York, knew all about it. Mr. Archibald has been applied to, and denies that he has any knowledge of the story, and now the Leader says it is "willing to wait till the facts fully develop themselves." It ought to have said to wait till people had forgotten all about its stupid story. What are the facts, and who is to develop them?

The total valuation of real estate in Boston is set at $169,959 300, and the total personal at $132,867,700, making the grand total $302,527,000,

What to Do with a "Green-Back."

There is, just now, a way of using one of Uncle Samuel's paper Dollars, so as to get back the worth of many gold dollars in a single year.—Everybody has heard of Seth Boyden's wonderful new Strawberry. From all accounts, it is a marvellous thing—the berries nearly as large as hen's eggs, and as good as they are large. Dealers were after it, offering as high as $3000 for the plants, to speculate upon; but we are glad to know that the enterprising publisher of the American Agriculturist got the start of them, and bought up all the plants, and is multiplying them in order to give them away to his subscribers! This is in effect a free gift to the Public—for the Agriculturist, costing only a dollar a year, is of itself worth many dollars to every one, as we can testify, having ourselves long been a reader of it. To those unacquainted with it, we would say that the Agriculturist is a large Journal, of 32 pages in every number, is beautifully got up, and is illustrated with many pleasing and instructive Engravings, which are alone worth the whole cost. The pages are literally filled with good things—plain, practical, reliable information upon everything connected with the work of the Household, the Garden and the Farm,—including a very pleasing and instructive Department for Children and Youth that is hardly surpassed by any of the professedly Children's Magazines. The thousands of useful hints and suggestions in the Agriculturist, all prepared by practical working men and women who know what they are talking about—can not fail to be worth many dollars to every reader, whether residing in City, Village, or Country.—There are special reasons for subscribing now; First, The rule for distributing the Strawberry plants is, "first come first served;" and Second, every new subscriber for the 23rd annual Volume (that is, for all of 1864), will get the remaining numbers of this year free.—Take our advice then, and send a dollar at once to the Publisher, (Orange Judd, 41 Park Row N. Y. City) and secure the paper, and the extra numbers, and also an early number in the great Strawberry list. If the plants are to come to you by mail, as they can safely do, send an extra five cents to cover the mailing. Those desiring to see the Agriculturist, before subscribing, can get a post-paid copy, by sending a dime to the Publisher, as above.

THE FREIGHT OF THE IDAHOE.—It will be remembered that some weeks since the steamer Idahoe arrived at this port, having on board about one hundred and sixty prostitutes, sent from the vicinity of the Army of the cumberland. The authorities here refused to allow of their being landed at this port. In the Nashville Union, we find the following:

"The nymphs of the Idahoe, having been turned away from the inhospitable shores of Louisville and Cincinnati, have again settled in Rock City. A military order admonishes these sinful damsels, that on presentation of a surgeon's certificate and payment of license fee, they will receive license to practice their profession. All such women found doing such business after this date, without such certificate and license, will be incarcerated in the workhouse for not less than thirty days.' $360 in license fees were received yesterday."

This certainly speaks very badly for the morals of Nashville.—Cincinnati Times.

A Birmingham firm has received an order for 2000 rifles, Whitworth's barrels, with the breech loading arrangement. The rifles when finished are to be issued to regiments in various parts of the world, so that they may be tested under different conditions.

The human body, in an advanced stage of decomposition as to be entirely unrecognizable, can now be so restored by chemical means as to present an almost completely natural appearance. This process was lately practiced with success in London, in the case of a body found in the Thames, which was suspected to be that of an escaped murderer, who had committed suicide. After the body had been subjected to the new process the witnesses were able to swear that he was not the supposed murderer.

Paris has a population of 1,200,000 to London's 3,000,000. While the French capital far surpasses the English in magnificent buildings and splendid streets, nothing in Europe is so amazing as the growth of London. Her population now exceeds that of Canada, and yet through all the outskirts of the west end, miles of streets, lined with splendid buildings, are every year opened, and still the increase to her monmouth population goes on at the rate of 1,000 a week.

A FEMALE SUBSTITUTE.—A robust and rosy-cheeked damsel called upon Provost Marshal Davis, of Maine, in company with her lover, who had been drafted, and offered herself as a substitute for him. She insisted that she was better able to endure the hardships of war, and that she would gladly shoulder a musket and take his place in the ranks, rather than the precious life of her lover should be endangered by rebel bullets. The object of her affections seemed to be entirely willing to assent to the arrangement; but the obdurate heart of Capt. Davis was proof against every appeal, and the devoted girl compelled to surrender her lover to the tender mercies of the Enrollment Board, went away sorrowing.

Nine sample bales of cotton from Java, a new source, have reached Rotterdam. Half of it was grown from New Orleans seed, [illegible] equal to [illegible] to [illegible] American. The other half was grown from East India seed, and falls below the standard.

The debt of Victoria College exceeds $40,000. Owing to the heavy interest, the expenditure last year exceeded the income by about $2,500.

An official report gives the number of Federal wounded at the battle of Gettysburg at 13,603, and the number of Confederate wounded left on the field and in hospitals in the vicinity at 7,739.

A BUNCH OF KEYS.—The key of the palace, lock-key; the key of the stable, jock-key; the key of the covenant, mum-key; the key of the kitchen, tar-key; the key of the cellar, pin-key; the key for curing colds, frost-bites, sprains, bruises, burns, is the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" at 25 cts per bottle. Sold by all medicine Dealers.

WARLIKE.—The Moniteur de la Flotte announces that the steam ram Magenta has come out of dock at Cherbourg, and that the greatest despatch is to be used in preparing her for sea and shipping her armament, which consists exclusively of rifled breech-loading guns. The camp at Chalons at present numbers 45,000 men; reinforcements are being forwarded so as to raise that corps d'armee to 52,000 men; they consist chiefly of cavalry drawn from Versailles, Fontainebleau, Melun, Compeigne, and St. Germain. These movements are certainly not very peaceful prognostications.

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—In reply to the correspondent of the Review, B. A., in last week's impression, I beg leave to notice, that his objections to my views as to the coming of Christ and the Millennium beginning about 1865 to 1870, are not based upon any satisfactory grounds. He says that Bishop Newton anticipated that the Millennium would begin about 1867, and Sir Isaac Newton thought it would be in 2036. Now the fact is, that Bishop Newton stated that the 1260 years of Papal supremacy must have commenced about the year 500, or 606, or 756, which were three epochs in its establishment; but which of those three points of time were to be the starting point for the 1260 years which are to end with the bringing in of the millennium, he left to be shown by future developments. In like manner, Sir Isaac Newton refrained from fixing any time for the beginning of the millennium; but said, that the great revolution foretold on the prophecies had not yet come to pass. Now it has been thought by many that the French revolution of 1793, was the political commotion referred to in the prophecies, as mentioned by Sir Isaac Newton; and, in truth, that revolution was a great landmark and guide-post to show our chronological position in the chart of prophecy. Numerous expositors believe that the 1260 years of Papal power began about 530-5, and ended about 1790-5, and then a further interval of 75 years (the season of 1335 over 1260) in Dan. xii. 7—12, has to elapse before the time of full millennial blessedness comes in. The 1260 and 1335 days also, have an ultimate fulfilment as literal days under the future Infidel Antichrist, as well as this past accomplishment as prophetical years under the Papal Antichrist.

But even if Bishop Newton and Sir I. Newton had decided that the millennium would not begin until about the year 2000, their opinions would carry very little weight in these days, because they lived before the great epoch of the French revolution; and more remarkable fulfilments of prophecy have occurred in the last 70 years since that period, than ever previously. Six of the seven year-day vials (Rev. xvi.) according to hundreds of expositors, have been poured out since 1792; and we are now at the end of the sixth vial which dries up the Euphrates or Turkish Empire, and the three unclean spirits of Infidelity, Revolutionary Lawlessness, and Jesuitical Superstition, are now going forth all through the earth. There remains, therefore, only the last of the seven vials to be fulfilled, and as the first six have been accomplished in about 70 years, it is evident that the remaining one could not reasonably be expected to occupy more than, at the furthest, ten years.

The 6000 years from the creation of Adam, have, also, recently been clearly shown to end about 1870, according to Shimeall, Cumming, Clinton, etc., and the 1260 years of Papal supremacy, have, by many, been placed from 606 to 1866.

Louis Napoleon, moreover, is plainly shown to contain 666 in both his names, one of which is Apoleon or Apollyon, Rev. ix. 11, as well as to agree in many other respects with the character of the future antichrist.

Your limited space forbids me to write more at present; but I would say, that the interest shown in these views by the inhabitants of Peterboro', as exhibited by the audiences of more than a thousand, that have attended my lectures, testifies not only to their good sense and higher average of intelligence than many other communities, but also rebukes the carnal dullness of B. A., who confesses to having heard only one of my lectures, preferring, sluggishly, to sit at home in his easy chair, rather than to come out and learn that fresh light has been cast upon the prophecies since the ancient times of Newton and other venerable and worthy divines, beyond whom timid and antiquated views he does not yet appear to have advanced.

Hoping that each reader of these lines may seek, by earnest prayer to God for His Holy Spirit, for more divine knowledge as well as for pardon of their sins, and a heart,

I am,
Yours truly,
M. BAXTER.

Peterboro', Sept. 1st, 1863.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

August 29th, 1863.

SIR,—The inhabitants of Warsaw and vicinity had an opportunity, during the last few evenings, of hearing a course of lectures by Mr. J. W. Love, who has travelled for upwards of a year in Palestine.—We may mention that, as Mr. Love could not obtain the use of the School Room, Mr. Choate, gratuitously, placed at his disposal a large and elegant Music Hall, well seated and lighted, which was quite a favor both to the lecturer and to his audience; and in this connection we beg to remark, that we think it is the duty of trustees of School Sections and of the friends of education in every place

LOST.

A BOUT ten days ago, a SMALL BLACK SPANIEL WATER PUP, answers to the name of "Lucy," had the owners name on a railway ticket tied round its neck when lost. Any one returning it to the owner will be suitably rewarded.

SELECT POETRY

THE PRESSMAN.

Pull up, my boys, turn quick the roncer,
And let the work begin
The world is pressing on without,
And we must press within—
And we who guide the public mind,
Have influence far and wide,
And all our deeds are good although
The devil is at our side.

Let fly the frisket, now my boys
Who are more pr nd than we,
While wait the natives crowd without
The inward power to see!
So pull away—none are so great,
Ah they who run the car,
And who have dignity like those
Who practice at the bar.

And you who twirl the roller's there,
Be quick, thou inky man;
Old Time is rolling on himself,
So beat him if you can;
Be careful of the light and shade,
Nor let the sheet grow pale,
Be careful o' the monkey looks
Of every head and tale.

Though high in office is our stand,
And proud is our case
We would not cast a slur on those
Who fill a lower place.
The gasping world is fed by us,
Who retail knowledge here;
By feeding them we feed ourselves,
Nor deem our fare too dear.

Pull up, my boys, turn quick the rounce,
And thus the chase we'll join;
We have deposits in the bank—
Our drawers are full of quoins;
And who should more gently cut
A figure or a dash?
Alas! that we who press so much,
Should s'er be pressed for cash!

VARIETIES.

AN AGREEABLE CUSTOMER.—'Stranger, I want to leave my dog in this 'ere office till the boat starts; I'm afraid somebody will steal him.'

'You can't do it,' said the clerk; 'take him out.'

'Well, stranger, that is cruel; but you're both dispositioned alike, and he's kinder company for you.'

'Take him out,' roared the clerk.'

'Well, stranger, I don't think you'er honest and you want watching. Here, Dragon,' he said to the dog, 'sit down here and watch that fellow slamp,' and turning on his heel, said,' Put him out stranger if he's troublesome.'

The dog lay there till the boat started, watching and growling at every movement of the clerk, who gave him the better half of the office.

'What church do you attend, Mrs. Partington?" Oh! any paradox church where the gospel is dispensed with!'

Curran was once asked by one of his brother judges, 'Do you see anything ridiculous in this wig?' 'Nothing but the head,' was the reply.

Why are photographers the most uncivil of all trades-people? Because when we make application for a copy of our portrait they always reply with a negative.

'Sam, why don't you talk to massa and tell him to lay up treasures in heaven?' 'What for? What de use of laying up treasures dere, where he never see 'em again?'

'I can't reconcile differences,' said Septimus Hardup. 'For instance, there is nothing more to its coming round the dinnertime—and nothing less certain than dinner.'

GRAMMATICAL JOKING.—'What is the reason of a blow leaving a mark after it?' 'It's easily accounted for,' was the reply; 'for you know that blow in the perfect makes blew.'

'Annett, my dear, what country is opposite to us on the globe?'

'Don't know, sir?'

'Well,' said the perplexed teacher, 'if I were to bore a hole through the earth, and you were to go in at this end, where would you come out?'

'Out of the hole, sir.'

A school-master who had an intolerable bit of talking to himself while alone, was asked by a neighbor what motive he could have in talking to himself. Jonathan replied that he had two good and substantial reasons; In the first place, he liked to talk to a sensible man; in the second place he liked to hear a sensible man talk.

THE ALBION

Established in 1822.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, published every Saturday Morning, in the City of New York, and devoted to News, Politics and General Literature. This old-established and popular Periodical is now supplied to the public at the rate of

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM,

OR SIX CENTS WEEKLY.

The Albion has been widely known for forty years throughout the United States and British North America. Thoroughly independent in tone, it will be found to combine all the elements of Home Journalism, with due attention to every American incident that is likely to bear on British interests.

The Literary Department

will be enriched as heretofore, with the cream of English Literature. In connection with Art the ablest criticism will continue to be published in the columns. There are added such Editorial Notices of current events as are deemed to be of interest to a circle of intelligent readers, whether British or American. The Commercial Review, it is believed, is a valuable weekly budget of information and entertainment.

THE ALBION ENGRAVINGS.

We have on hand copies of the Albion Engravings of Washington and others can be furnished with them—at $2 each to subscribers and $3 to non-subscribers. A few proof copies of the Florence Nightingale print on India paper may be had. The following engravings are also on hand:

Chalon's Queen Victoria, Luna's Prince Albert, Allan's Sir Walter Scott, Stuart's Washington, Meteom's Benjamin Franklin. Gone's First Trial by Jury, Pickler's St. Paul's London, Portrait of General Havelock, Herring's Three Members of the Temperance Society, The Castle of Ischia from Chantrelle's Picture, Wandesford's Mary Queen of Scots, Landseer's Return from Hawking, Landseer's Dignity and Impudence, Landseer's Distant Prize, Dr. Kane at the Graves of Sir John Franklin's Men, Wilkes, Columbus propounding an Theory of a New World, and the Falls of Niagara from an original drawing made for the Albion.

Engravings can be safely forwarded by mail or express, on paste-board roller, at a charge of a few cents.

Money may be transmitted in registered letters at the risk of the office.

Subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces have to pay 36 cents per annum for American Postage.

Our Clubbing List is unusually attractive.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
TWELFTH VOLUME.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The July number commences the Twelfth Volume of the Atlantic Monthly, and will contain such a list of contributors as will entitle it to marked consideration. Nathaniel Hawthorn contributes for the first number of the new volume "Outside glimpses of English Poverty," one of the most interesting of his admirable English Sketches.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has written for it "The Doings of a Sun-beam." Robert Dale Owen discusses "The Claims of Labor or Service," and presents some new views for the study of the people of America. Gail Hamilton continues her popular "Gala Days." Professor Agassiz offers another eloquent paper on mountains. And many other articles of equal value with the above, will be included in the forthcoming number.

Begun in 1857, the "Atlantic Monthly" has now reached its sixty-eighth number. Its circulation increasing largely from the start, has given it such a currency throughout the country as no other magazine has ever acquired. Its faith in impartial liberty as a principle, and its warfare against Despotism in every form, have made it a welcome visitor, far and wide, every month. It does not abate in these our days of trial and battle, one jot of that firm belief in the brighter days to come which its Right and Justice are sure always to win, but its future pages will show an increased activity in placing before the midst of the people an unfaltering trumpet-note in the power of the North to limit the existence of a rebellion founded in cruel injustices and oppressions.

The prosperity of the Atlantic enables its conductors to employ the most eminent talent of country in its columns. All the best known writers in American literature, contributing constantly to its pages, give to the sole right to be known as our national magazine. Its staff still comprises the following names among its leading contributors:—

James Russell Lowell, Henry W. Longfellow, Louis Agassiz, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, C. C. Hazewell, T. W. Higginson, Aubrey, Margaret Howith, Mrs. Julia W. Howe, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Oliver W. Holmes, John G. Whittier, E. P. Whipple, H. T. Tuckerman, Jas. E. Norton, G. S. Hilliard, H. Giles, Walter Mitchell, H. T. Tuckerman, John Weiss, Mrs. H. B. Stowe, Harriet Martineau, Charles Reade, "The Country Parson," Rose Terry, Harriet E. Prescott, Robert T. S. Lowell, J. T. Trowbridge, Edward Everett, Professor A. D. White:

The foregoing list is will be seen includes THE LEADING AMERICAN WRITERS.

And is such as to warrant the publishers in promising

The Best Essays,
The Best Stories,
The Best Poems,

Which American talent can furnish.

TERMS.—The Atlantic is for sale by all Book and periodical dealers: Price, 25 cents a number. Subscription for the year, $3.00, postage paid. Yearly subscriptions received, or single numbers supplied by any dealer, or by the Publishers.

Specimen numbers sent gratis on receipt of six cents for postage.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

EMPLOYMENT.

THE Undersigned has, for several years past, been engaged in a business, which has yielded him at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum, and is now willing to teach it to others. The business is of a highly useful and general character, adapted both to cities and villages, and one that any person of ordinary capacity, young or old, male or female, can acquire with a few hours' practice, and by which they can secure a very handsome income. Several young ladies who have received instructions from me, both in New York State and Pennsylvania, are earning upwards of $15 per week by it, and there is no reason why any one else cannot do the same. Invalids, even, can do well by it, as it is no peddling affair, but a business that is perfectly respectable. Gentleman and ladies of leisure who would like to learn the business for their own amusement or pleasure, will find the practice of it a pleasant pastime, and see that they will take great interest in. On receipt of $1, I will send printed instructions by which any person can readily acquire the art, and those instructions will also contain every particular relative to the carrying it on so that it will be highly profitable. The purchaser of the "printed instructions" will also be authorized to teach it to others; and I have sometimes received as high as $300, for teaching it personally to a single individual. I would state further that $2.50 or $3 will buy everything that is necessary to commence the business with, and the articles can be got almost anywhere, in city or country, or if preferred, I can furnish them. Poetry.

BY WIFE AND CHILD.

I dream my gentle wife is near,
A girlish figure small and slight,
May, should I stretch her figure, ere
Slips present out of sight?
There is no beauty strange and rare,
Fashioned by rapturous poet's rule—
All hearts might deem her very fair,
And most truly beautiful.
Most beautiful to painter's eyes,
Because her noblest beauty lies
Not in her features faultless grace,
But in the sweet mooring of her face.

A look of patient gentleness
On lip and brow serenely lies,
And oh, a word of tenderness
Shines softly in her sunny eyes,
Her lips—to me no rosebud wet
Can half so beautiful could be—
I love them that they never yet
Spoke one unloving word to me!
There is a sweet and nameless grace
Floating around her form and face—
The beauty of a fairy mind
Blooms and beautifies the whole.

And when the tiresome day is gone,
And the sweet evening time comes on,
And, wearied out with toil and care
I sink into my study chair,
Closing my eyes to curtain out
The vexing shades of fear and doubt—
A tiny foot, with noiseless glide,
Comes stealing softly to my side—
Bright curls adown my shoulder twine,
And little fingers hide in mine—
And gentle tones salute my ear
With words of sympathy and cheer,
Oh! I could meet with dauntless heart,
The sternest, darkest ills of life,
With such a guardian as thou art,
My own beloved wife!

My child! my darling bright haired boy,
A happy laughter-loving sprite,
Whose heart is mirth, whose life is joy,
Undimmed by shade or blight,
He has his mother's curls of gold,
His laugh has just her ringing tone,
And in his features I behold
The softened likeness of my own.
And gazing, oft I wander back
Along my boyhood's flowery track,
I roam again beside the stream,
And stooping, see, or seem to see,
My face reflected back to me!

My wife and child, my all on earth,
Oh! what were life, bereft of them
Beside their love how little worth
Seems glory's brightest diadem!
My wife and child! these are the charms
Which make me cling to earth:—I rise
To circle them in love's fond arms,
And in the act—arouse my eyes,
Where, wheream I and where am they?
Alas! the dream has passed away—
I sit here in the darkening room,
Alone amid the dusky gloom,—
Ay, all alone, no wife, no child—
For me of late hath smiled.

Miscellaneous.

STICK OF A LOVER.

One fine winter evening, early in the present century, Colonel——, and his maiden sister, Patty, were sitting on each side of a delightful hickory fire, enjoying their "otium cum dignitate," without any interruption, for at least an hour; and that, considering the sex of Miss Patty, was certainly very remarkable. The Colonel was sitting cross-legged in a great arm chair, with his spectacles on, and a newspaper in his hand—fast asleep. Miss Patty was moving herself gently forward and backward in a low rocking-chair. Close by her feet was the cat, while Carlo was stretched out at full length on the rug in front of the fire, and, like his master, fast asleep.

At length the Colonel roused from his nap, took off his spectacles, and rubbed his eyes; then, glancing at a very large pile of papers that lay on the table near him, said—

'I wish Henry was hear to help me about my rent.'

'Well, I really wish he was,' answered his sister.

'I can't expect him this month yet,' yawned the Colonel.

'Hadn't you better send for him?' said his sister.

Upon this the dog got up and walked towards the door.

'Where are you going, Carlo?' said the old gentleman.

The dog looked into his master's face, wagged his tail, but never said a word, and pursued his way to the door; and as he could not well open it himself, Miss Patty got up and opened it for him. The Colonel seemed perfectly satisfied, and was composing himself for another nap when the loud barking of the dog announced the approach of some one, and roused him from his lethargy. Presently the door opened, and a young man gaily entered the room.

'Why, William Henry, is that you?' said Aunt Patty.

'Henry, my boy, I am heartily glad to see you,' said the Colonel, getting entirely out of the chair, and giving his nephew a hearty shake of the hand. 'Pray, what has brought you home so suddenly?'

'Oh, I do not know,' said Henry; 'it's rather dull in town, so I thought I would just step up and see how you all came on.'

'Well, I am glad to see you; sit down,' said the Colonel.

'So do,' said the sister.

'There, aunt, is a bottle of first rate stuff for you; and here, uncle, is one of capital Manoschinee.'

'Thank you, my boy,' said the Colonel; 'positively it does my heart good to see you in such fine spirits.'

'And mine too,' said his sister.

Henry, either anxious to help his uncle or himself, broke the seal from the top of the bottle of cordial, and drew the cork, while aunt Patty got some glasses.

'Well, my boy,' said the Colonel, whose good humor increased every moment, 'what is the news in B——?—Anything happened?'

'No—yes,' said Henry; 'I have got one of the best stories to tell that you ever heard in your life.'

'Come, let's have it,' said he, filling his glass.

'Well, you must know,' said Henry, 'that while I was in town, I met with an old and particular friend of mine, about my own age. About two months ago, he fell desperately in love with a young girl, and wants to marry her, but dares not without the consent of his uncle, a fine old gentleman, as rich as Crœsus—do take a little more cordial.'

'Why, don't his uncle wish him to marry?' inquired the Colonel.

'O yes,' resumed Henry, 'but there's the rub. He's very awesom that Bill should get a wife, but he's terribly afraid that he'll be taken in; for it is generally understood that he is to be the gentleman's heir. And as for the uncle, though very liberal in everything else, he suspects every lady who pays his nephew the least attention, of having a fortune hunter.'

'The old scamp,' said the Colonel—'why can't he let the boy have his own way?'

'I think as much,' said Pat.

'Well, how did he manage?' said the Colonel.

'Why,' said Henry, 'he was in a confounded pickle. He was afraid to ask his uncle's consent right out; he could not manage to let him see the girl; for she lives at some distance; but he knew that his uncle enjoyed a good joke, and was an enthusiastic admirer of beauty. So, what does he do, but go and get her miniature taken, for she was extremely beautiful, besides being intelligent and accomplished.'

'Beautiful! intelligent! accomplished!' exclaimed the Colonel, 'pray what objection could the fool have to her?' inquired the Colonel.

'Why, she is not worth a cent,' said Henry.

'Fudge,' said the Colonel, 'I wish I had been in the old chap's place; how did he get along?'

'Why, as I said, he had a picture taken and as it was about the time of collecting rents he thought it would make the old man good natured if he went home and offered to assist him; and so, answering all inquiries, he took the miniature out of his pocket, handed it to his uncle, and asked him if he liked it—telling him that a particular friend lent it to him. The old gentleman was in ecstacy of delight, and declaring he would give the world to see a woman so handsome as that, and that Bill might have her.'

'Ha!' shouted the Colonel, 'the old chap was well come up with. The best joke I ever heard; but was she really beautiful?'

'The most angelic creature I ever saw,' said Henry; 'but you can judge for yourself. He lent me the picture, and knowing your taste that way, I brought it for you to look at. Here Henry took it out of his pocket and handed it to his uncle, at the same time filling his glass.—Aunt Patty got out of the chair to look at the picture.

'Well, how,' she said that is a beauty.'

'You may well say that, sister,' said the Colonel; 'about me if I do not wish I had been in Bill's place. Deuce take it! who did you not get the girl yourself, Harry? The most beautiful creature I ever laid my eyes on! I would give a thousand dollars for such a niece.

'Would you?' inquired Henry, patting the dog.

'Yes, that I would,' replied the Colonel; and nine thousand more upon the top of it, and that makes ten thousand shoot me if I wouldn't.'

'Then I'll introduce her to you to-morrow,' said Henry.

And there was a wedding at the house of the worthy Colonel the ensuing week and as the old gentleman was highly pleased with the beautiful and accomplished bride, it is reasonable to suppose that Harry did not forget his promise.

Artemus Ward to the Prince of Wales.

FRIEND WALES,—You remember me. I saw you in Canady a few years ago. I remember you too. I seldum forgit a person.

I hearn of your marriage to the Printcis Alexandry, & menny times writ you a congratoolatory letter at the time, but I've bin bildin a barn this summer & hain't had no time to write letters to folks. Excuse me.

Numeris changes has tooken place since we met in the body politic. The body politic, in fack, is sick. I sumetimes think it has got biles, friend Wales.

In my country we've got a war, while your country, in conjunktion with Cap'n Semms of the Alabarmy, manetanes a neutral position!

I'm fraid I can't write gooks when I sit about it. Oh no, I guess not!

Yes, Sir, we've got a war, and the troo Patrit has to make sacrifinses, you bet.

I have already given two cousins to the war, & I stand reddy to sacrifise my wife's brother ruther'n not see the rebellyin knushed. And if wuss comes to wuss I'll shed ev'ry drop of blud my able-bodied relations has got to promskoot the war. I think sumbody oughter be proskooted, & it may as well be the war as any body else. When I git a gootch fit onto me it's no use to try ter stop me.

You hearn about the draft, friend Wales, no doubt. It caused sum squirmin', but it was fairly conducted, I think, for it hit all classes. It is troo that Wendill Phillips, who is a American citizen of African scent, 'caped, but so did Vallendigum, who is Conservative, and who was reseatly sent South, tho' he would have bin sent to the Dry Tortogus if Abe had'sposed for a minit that the Tortoogusses would keep him.

We hain't got any daily paper in our town, but we've got a female sewin circle, which answers the same purpess, and we wasn't long in suspents as to who was drafted.

One young man who was drawd claimed to be exempt because he was the only sun of a widow'd mother who supported him. A few able-bodied dead men was dewised, but whether their heirs will have to pay 3 hundrid dollars a peace for 'em is a question for Wlatin', who 'pears to be tukenin up this draft bisniss right smart. I hope he makes good wages.

I think most most of the contributtors this place will go. A few will go to Canady stoppin' on their way to Concord, N. H., where I widerstan there is a Mestem of Harrs.

You see I'm sorry, friend Wales, bein' all sides; but no offense is ment. You know I ain't a politician, and never was. I vote for Mr. Union—that's the only candidate I've got. I claim, however, to have a well-balanced mind; those' my ideas of a well-balanced mind differs from the ideas of a partner I once had, whose name was Billson. Billson and me organized a strollin dramatic company, & we played the Drunkard, or the Fallen Saved, with a real drunkard. The play didn't take particularly, and says Billson to me, Let's give 'em some immoral drammy. We had a large troop onto our hands, consistin' of eight tragedians and 4 brass drum. But I say, No, Billson; and then says I, Billson, you hain't got a well-balanced mind. Says he, Yes, I have, old hoss-fly (he was a low cuss)—yes, I have. I have a mind, says he, that balances in any direction that the public rekires. That's wot I calls a well-balanced mind. I sold out and bid adoo to Billson. He is now an outcast in the State of Vermont. The miserable man once played Hamlet. There wasn't any orchestry, and wishin' to expire to slow moosic, he died playin' on a clarionnet himself, interpersed with hurt-rendin' groans, as such is the world! Ahem! alars! how enthankful we ort to that Providence which kindly allows us to live and borrow money, and fail and do bizniss!

But to return to our subjeck. With our present grate triumps on the Mississippi, the Father of Waters (and them is waters no Father need feel 'shamed of—twig the wittikism?) and the cheerio look of things in other places, I reckon we shan't want any Muslum of Harts. And what upon airth do the people of Concord, N. H., want a Mulsum of Hart for? Hain't you got the State House now? & what more do you want?

But all this is furrin to the purpiss of this note, after all. My object in now addressin you is to gin sum advice, friend Wales, about managin you wife, a bizniss I've had over thirty years experience in.

You had a good weddin. The papers has a good deal to say about "scenes" in connection therewith. Not knowing what that air and so I frankly tells you, my noble look dook of the throne, I can't exactly say whether we hand 'em or not. We was both very much flustrated. But I never injoyed myself better in my life.

Dowtless, your surprise was ahead of our'n. As regards postin' Miss Baldinsville was allers shaky. But you can get a good meal in New York, & cheap too. You can git half a mackrell at Delmonico Mr. Mannon Perry's for six dollars, and biled portatoes thrown in.

As I said, I manage my wife without any particler trouble. When I first commenced trainin' her I instituted a series of experiments and them as didn't work I abandoned.' You'd better do similer. Your wife may object to gittin' up and bildin the fire in the mornin', but if you commence with her at once you may be able to overkum this prejoodis. I regret to observe that I didn't commence airly enuff. I wouldn't you s'pose I was ever licked out of bed. Not at all. I simply say in regard to bildin' fires, that I didn't commence airly enuff. It was rather cold mornin' when I fust proposed the idea to Betsy. It wasn't well received, and I found myself lyin' on the fluor putty sudden. I thought I'd git up and bild the fire myself.

Of course now you're married you can eat onions. I allus did, and if I know my own hart, I allus will. My daughter, who is goin' on 17 and is frisky, says they're disgustin. And speaking of my daughter reminds me that quite a number of young men have suddenly discovered that I'm a very entertainin' old feller, and they visit us frekeently, specially on Sunday evenins. One young chap—a lawyer by habit—don't cum af much as he did. My wife's father lives with us. His intelleck totters a little, and he saves the papers containin' the proceedins of our State Legislater. The old gent likes to read out loud, and he reads tol'ble well. He eats hash freely, which makes his voice clear; but as he unfortunitly has to spell most of his words, I may say he reads slow. Well whenever the lawyer made his appearance I would set the old man a-readin the Legislatur' reports. I kept the young lawyer up one night till 12 o'clock, listenin to a lot of acts in regard to a draw-bridge away orf in the in the east part of the State, havin' sent my daughter to bed at half-past 8. He hasn't bin there since, and I understan' he says I go round swindlin the Public.

I never attempted to reorganize my wife but once. I shall never attempt again. I'd bic to a public dinner, and had allowed myself to be betrayed into drinkin' several people's healths; and wishin' to make 'em as robust as possible, I continued drinkin' their healths until my own affected. Consekuns was, I presented myself at Betsy's bedside late at night with considi'ble liquor concealed about my person. I had somehow got persuaham of a housship on my way home, and remember in' sum cranky observations of Mrs. Ward in the mornin', I snapt the whip pretty lively, and in a very loud voice, I said, "Betsy, you need reorganizin'! I have cum, Betsy," I continued—crackin' the whip over the bed—"I have cum to reorganize you! Ha-ave you per-rayed to-ni'e?"

* * * * *

I dreamed that night that sumbody had laid a housship over me sev'ril consekootiv times; and when I awoke I found she had. I hain't drunk much of any thin' since, and if I ever have another reorganizin' job on hand I shall let it out.

My wife is 52 years old, and has also sustained a good character. She's a good cook. Her mother lived to a venerable age, and died while in the act of frying slap-jacks for the County Commissioners. And may no rood hand pluck a flour from her toomatun! We hain't got any pictures of the old lady, because she'd never stand for her ambrotipe, and therefore I can't give her likeness to the world through the meejum of the illustrated papers; but as she wasn't a brigadier-general, partickerly, I don't s'pose they'd publish it any how.

It's best to give a woman cornsid'ble leeway; but one mornin, when my misdirected friend, Mr. Roofus Muskins, overseer, was sick with the fever, but his wife moved his bed into the door yard while she was cleaning house. I told Roofus this wasn't the thing, 'specially as it was raisin' ruinashun; but he said he wanted to give his wife "a little leeway." That was too much. I told Mrs. Muskins that her Roofus would die if he staid out there into the rain much longer; when she said, "it wasn't his fault if he dies unprepared," at the same time handin him his mother's Bible. It was awful! I stood by, however, and nursed him as well as I could, but I was a putty wet-nuss, I can tell you.

There's vartis ways of managin a wife friend Wales, but the best and only safe way is to let her do just about as she wants to. I 'dentsel that there plan, time I mo ago, and it works like a charm.

Remember me kindly to Mrs. Wales, and good luck to you both! And as years roll by, and accidents begin to happen to you—among which I hope there'll be Twins—you will agree with me that family joys are the only one a man can bet on with any certinty of winnin'.

A. WARD.

Uncle Aaron's Travels.

The boys were playing under the shade of the big butternut tree on a warm afternoon. They had pitched, and tumbled, and wrestled, until they were heated and not a little tired.

Their stories were too few and too short to last long, and they were wondering what to do next, when Uncle Aaron came round the corner.

"Oh! Uncle Aaron! Uncle Aaron!" shouted they, "won't you please to stop a few minutes?

"Well, boys, what is it that you want of me?" said the good-natured and kind-hearted man.

It is only such men that acquire the title of "Uncle" to the children of the neighborhood.

"We want you to tell us about your travels. We know you have been a great way off on the way to New Jersey—and you must have seen strange things there. What did you find that's wonderful? We don't want to hear anything that is not wonderful."

The old man's mouth drew down a little, and his eyes seemed to laugh this time a bit.

"Well, boys, when I got down to Jersey, I did see some things that were worth the seeing."

"We have heard that it is a great place for mosquitoes and all that kind of things."

"Yes, it is. I remember going down to the salt marsh—"

"What is a marsh?"

"It's a meadow."

"And what makes it salt?"

"It is so near the salt water, and so low that the water overflows it when the tide is full."

"As I was saying, I went down on the salt marsh, and the mosquitoes came round awful hungry. How they did bite! I was standing under a willow tree when they came upon me. Some would fly at me, and some would run up the tree and bark! And then so large, too! A great many of them would weigh a pound!"

"Oh! Uncle Aaron!" "Why Uncle Aaron!"

"Then I went down to the sand beach and walked along until I came to some tall grass growing in the salt water. It was low tide and the grass was left, and every spire had a great number of live fish hanging to it! Then I looked into a little creek and saw fish swimming sideways."

The boys had risen up, and were standing around Uncle Aaron, with their eyes open and their mouths shut, as if they were breathing hard.

"O, Uncle Aaron! what wonderful things. But we can't believe them! Is all this truly and really so?"

"Yes, truly and really; but what is so hard to believe?"

"Why that a mosquito would run up a tree and bark like a dog."

"I did not say that. I said they ran up the tree and bark—that is, up the bark of the tree. I said nothing about their barking, or about a dog."

"Oho! we see through it! But you did say a great many of them would weigh a pound apiece!"

"No, I said no such thing. I said a great many of them would weigh a pound—and I have no doubt they would, but it would take a great many!"

"Ah! we begin to see. But what about those great, live fish that you saw holding on to the grass?"

"I did not say they were great fish. On the contrary, they were very small. They were young oysters!"

"And those fish you saw swimming sideways—"

"Were crabs!" said Uncle Aaron.

The boys looked at each other, as if to say, "Now shall we laugh or be mad?" But in a moment good nature prevailed and they shouted.

"Now, my boys," said Uncle Aaron, "I have told you nothing but what was really true, and yet it was told in such a way that my travels seemed wonderful. So you will find it all the way through life. You will meet with men and travellers that seem marvellous, just from the way they tell their stories. But it is wrong. I should have done wrong now, had I not determined that I would set you right before we parted. In the Bible you will find wonderful things, but it is not because they are told in a strange manner, but because they are things which God did, and therefore, like all he does, they are wonderful. Indeed, one of the names which belong to Christ is "Wonderful!" He never disappointed us, though his travels are all wonderful!"

THE NEW MILITIA BILL.

The Bill which has lately been introduced by the Premier differs very materially from that of last Session. It treats of what is now known as the Sedentary Militia. It intended that the Volunteer system shall form the subject of a separate Bill. The new Bill, though it repeals, retains a number of provisions of the existing law; but many improvements and additions are made. The present ages for service are retained, and the Militia will be divided into three classes—first class service men comprising unmarried men and widowers without children between 18 and 45 years of age; second service men being between the same ages, married and widowers with children; the third class forming the reserve and embracing all male inhabitants between 45 and 60 years of age.

Under the name of the non-service Militia the Officers now holding commissions are to ...ue their duties, and the enrolment of ...panies in Company Divisions is to be ...ntinued, as under the law of 1856.

Military Districts are abolished, and each County forms a Regimental District.

From the Militia rolls in each County will be balloted by the plan proposed in the Bill of last Session—but only once in three years—the men of first and second service men, to complete such number of Battalions as the Commander-in-Chief may consider necessary to require. Each Battalion will consist of 750 men.

The different Municipalities in each County will have to furnish men in proportion to their population. These Service Battalions will exist for three years, and may be called out in case of emergency—the first service men being first liable.—Authority is given to the Commander-in-Chief to call out any organized Service Battalion, for drill and instruction, for a period not exceeding six days. Present commissions to remain in full force unless cancelled by the Commander-in-Chief, who may, however, if he thinks fit, appoint officers provisionally. There is one very important feature in the new Bill, and that is the evident attention that has been given to get properly qualified officers. Everybody knows the complaints on this score in years past and at present. It is provided, therefore, in the Bill, that a School of Military Instruction shall be established in each section of the Province; and that the Commander-in-Chief ... for that purpose make arrangements to do so in connection with some Regiment of Her Majesty's forces. It is proposed to devote a large sum to militia purposes, of which it is calculated about $18,000 will be expended in the support of these Institutions. A portion of the expenses of those receiving instructions will be borne. Penalties for offences committed by Militia are provided, and means for enforcing them.

The above is a rough and hasty sketch of the main features of the Bill; but we think nothing of importance has been omitted It is certainly a great improvement on the Bill of last Session.

EMANCIPATION IN RUSSIA.

The number of serfs in Russia was 20,000,000, and the capital invested in this property was immense. Hence the opposition the Czar has had to encounter in his benevolent undertaking. The master and serf are of different races; the former being Caucasian in his origin; the latter, Tartar. The master, consequently, looked upon his servant as not only being his inferior in position but in the scale of being. We are glad to hear, therefore, that the emancipation scheme has so far worked well.

The endeavors of the Government to educate the former serfs for a kind of self-government appear to be eminently successful. The peasants elect themselves the heads of the villages, and these correspond with the authorities. These heads assemble twice a month to settle disputes among the peasants. Then the government has appointed throughout Russia 1,600 honorary magistrates to settle disputes between the peasants and proprietors, and more than one of the latter have discovered that the time when their serfs were entirely at their mercy has passed away.

Together with the social improvement of the country, education is progressing. More than 8,000 schools have been opened for the peasants, and everywhere they are anxious to read, as they feel that they ought to be allowed to read the laws by which they are governed.

It is already apparent that it is not the peasants alone who are benefitted by the emancipation ordinance, but that the proprietors gain as much, at least morally. Unless they are willing to be impoverished they will find it necessary to quit a life of idleness, and instead of relying blindly upon a steward, will superintend their estates themselves.

Thus emancipation will give to Russia what it needed so much—a powerful impulse to increase political activity. It is already leading to other reforms, and preparing the way for a constitutional form of government.

Russia is doing one good work; it is consolidating the nation, which was originally composed of many different tribes, into a single people. A uniform system of education, and, so far as practicable, a uniform system of laws, will, in time, do much to effect this end.

INCENDIARISM.

THREE LIVES SACRIFICED.

On Saturday last, a fire happened in Toronto, by which considerable property was destroyed, and three lives sacrificed. The fire was proved to be an act of incendiarism. It seems that the occupants of the store fired, Messrs. Barry & Son, Leather Dealers, had dismissed a man named McGlyn from their employment, on account of his dissipated habits, and engaged in his stead one named Elliott, who formerly had been in their service. McGlyn was extremely angry at his dismissal, and bore a grudge against Elliot. He had been heard to say that Eliot would not long enjoy his place. On the day of the fire, McGlyn, upon some pretence, called upon Elliott, whose family occupied the upper part of the building as a dwelling. McGlyn and Elliot had some hot words together, and at length came to blows. After leaving Elliot's, McGlyn remained near the store, and was seen to run to the rear of the premises, where it is supposed he got into the cellar, and set fire to the straw which was strewn over the floor. When the fire was discovered by those in the house, all chances of escape were cut off. The inmates were Mrs. Eliot, her daughter Eliza Jane, aged 4 years; her son James, 20 month old; and her aunt, Mrs. Milligan. The two women in despair precipitated themselves from the window to the ground, a distance of some 40 feet. The result was, that both were so badly injured that Mrs. Eliot died in the afternoon of the following day, and her aunt lies in a very precarious condition. The two children were both burned to death. McGlyn was arrested, and the Coroner's Jury which was called on Sunday forenoon to hold an inquest upon their bodies, brought in a verdict; that Eliza Jane and James Elliot came to their death from suffocation and burning by fire, which fire, from the evidence brought before us, was caused by the prisoner, John McGlyn. McGlyn has been committed to take his trial for arson and murder. The inquest upon the mother was held on Tuesday, and resulted in a similar verdict against McGlyn. McGlyn has lately been very dissipated in his habits.

MR. SCOTTE.

Mr. Scotte has been appointed Judge of the Superior Court, in place of Judge Baudeau who has resigned through infirmity and general ill health. We think the Ministry have done great credit to themselves in the appointment. They have not allowed little, petty party quarrels to interfere with their sense of right, or with doing an act of justice. Mr. Scotte has earned the honor conferred upon him. Ignoring his late somewhat inconsistent course, we think that he has acted in a manner that will make all rejoice in his elevation to the Bench. We would conclude, from what we know of the gentleman's mental constitution, that he would make a better judge than leader of a political party. He seems to have a marked judicial intellect. Whatever his faults, we believe he leaves behind him in the House, a character irreproachable, and altogether free from engaging in jobbery of any kind, or in any schemes that would benefit self at the expense of the country. The Opposition are quite dumb-foundered at Mr. Scotte's acceptance of the judgeship. They reckoned on him as one of the strongest helps in defeating the Ministry; but they have reckoned this time without their host. Poor Foley is "no where." The Opposition, we opine, will have to "cave in" before long.

ADJOURNMENT.

The Ministry, we find, propose, immediately after the settlement of the Militia Bill, and the voting of the supplies, to adjourn Parliament until sometime near the end of the year—making the present sitting and the next one only one Session. This, we think, is a move in the right direction on the part of the Government; but, we are sorry to say it does not seem to meet that cordial approval from members that it ought. The Ministry's proposal would save to the country about $125,000—no small item in the general expenditure. The members of both Houses number about 200, and at the rate of $600 each per Session, a sessional allowance amounts to $120,000. $5000 is a small figure for other expenses. $125,000 saved; we sincerely hope that the House will agree to the Ministry's proposal. Retrenchment should commence at home. Those in high places should begin to set a good example; they have in days past—set a very bad one—in money matters as well as in other respects.

The Ministry, it is true, has not a large majority; but the majority it has, it does not owe to purchase or bribery. This is proved by the fact, that all the plans and measures of the Ministry are framed upon the principle of economy. Their aim is to cut down the patronage in their hands, and the expenditure of the public money, to the lowest possible limit. And, we believe, any department of Government may be ransacked in vain for anything like building up influence by jobbery, or giving offices to partizans—as was the case under late governments. Those who support the Ministry, in all cases, do not so because they consider the ministers to be or to do just what they would like them to be and to do in every respect; but because they fully and conscientiously believe that the administration are trying their best to purge away the abuses that came into existence under the rule of those now in Opposition. In a word, they prefer those in power to those in opposition. We think that is no wonder; for whatever the Ministry may do in the future, we think what it has done is of a character, in general, calculated to meet the approval of the thinking and disinterested.

The debt of Victoria College, Cobourg, exceeds $40,000. Owing to the heavy interest, the expenditure, last year, exceeds the income by about $2,500.

CHARLESTON.

The news from Charleston shows that the besieging army is making sure progress against the unfortunate city.

The precise state of things is not known as General Gilmore has discouraged sending communications north as much as possible.

Gilmore's guns have done great execution; and his parallels are said to be so far advanced that his men can throw fire grenades into the pits defending the forts.

Gilmore appears sanguine of success The people of Charleston are extremely frightened by some new engine of destruction the Federals are using, called Greek fire. The fate of Vicksburg will, judging from circumstances seem be the fate of the once gay and beautiful, but now (apparently) doomed city of the Palmettos.

Volunteer Review at Brantford.

This much talked of review came off at Brantford, on Thursday last, with great eclat. Over 3,000 men were on the ground; they presented a very fine and imposing appearance. General Napier and suite were present, and the General declared himself highly pleased with the manner in which the different exercises were gone through with. The Courier says there were 30,000 spectators witnessing the review. The good people of Brantford deserve great credit for their enterprise in getting up the affair, and for the liberality and spirit in which all the arrangements were carried out. The troops were the guests of the town. The Town Council gave $600 towards their entertainment. Other towns will, no doubt, soon follow in the the wake of Brantford.

The Leader is very wroth, because things at Quebec don't go to suit it. What a parish has the Leader become! Under the regime of the Macdonald-Cartier government, nothing went wrong in the Leader's opinion; while everything went wrong in the people's opinion. Now, the order is just reversed; the Leader condemns and the people approve. The Leader has recently been assailing the Toronto representatives—Mr. McDonald, because he presumes to speak; and Mr. Smith because he does not presume to speak. As the Quebec Mercury correctly remarks:—The attack suggests a comparison favorable to both of these gentlemen. Mr. Macdonald, speaks better than Mr. John Robinson, and is not likely even to perpetrate the absurdities which made the latter gentleman a laughing-stock in the House. Mr. Smith talks quite as much as Mr. Crawford, and votes a great deal better; the difference between them consisting in this—that Mr. Crawford made a profession of purity and voted stead astly with the corruptionists, whilst Mr. Smith entered political life a supporter of liberal views and economical measures, and adheres to an administration which is pledged to both.

Nothing can be more pitiable than the conduct of the minority of the Upper Canada members. The course they are best upon pursuing is most suicidal to the interests they profess to support and advocate. Why Upper Canadians will persist in sending these to Parliament, session after session, to play the old game over, would be very hard to conceive, were it not remembered that not a few of them represent rotten boroughs, or constituencies whose standing, in a moral or intellectual point of view, is not first rate. This ought to be borne in mind. The few that do not, are traitors to their own pledges and promises. Those who wish to give the Lower Canadians undisputed domination over the Upper Province, should be closely watched, and at the next election, rebuked as they deserve, by ignominiously driving them from the polls. Every Upper Canadian who voted for the Sicotte-Foley amendment to the Address, well knowing the moving cause of the amendment to be personal pique, cannot be looked upon in any other light than—that of a rampant factionist, or a persistent abettor of treachery. We cannot help it—if we are told to look at home.

The Government seem determined to retrench, and save to the country all it can. All the howls of the opposition journals about "cheeseparings, &c.," do not seem to intimidate them. Sinecure after sinecure is being swept away. Those officials that are retained are expected to do their duty and earn their money, and they must do it—or do something else. It is "work," or its alternative, "go.". This is right! Private considerations should not be allowed to interfere with the healthful development of public policy. We see at last that Mr. Beatty, of the Leader, is about to be compelled to give up the York Roads, of which he has been reaping the profits so long, without either paying principal or interest. The Leader man—notwithstanding his statements to the contrary—must have made a good thing of those roads. It is to be hoped that the Government will be able to find a purchaser somewhat more likely to pay than the last one.

Mr. J. A. Macdonald has withdrawn his motion for a Committee of Inquiry into a charge of corruption against the Ministry, as he was not prepared to proceed with it at present. The friends of the Opposition here are indignant at Mr. Macdonald's backing out, and they even hint that he has been tampered with. We hope there has not been more interference on the part of the Grand Trunk officials. What about the suppressed telegram which Mr. Ferrier has shown to a few individuals? Why should there be any withholding of facts.

It is rumoured in the rebel papers that Jeff Davis has decided to call out 500,000 slaves as soldiers; promising them $8 a month, and freedom and land at the close of the war. The South must do something; for if the correspondent of the London Times be correct, the strength of the Confederacy is fast wearing away before the inroads made upon it.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The latest European news is not of much importance.

It is rumoured that Maximilian will decline the Mexican Crown.

It was reported, but not on very reliable authority, that the Alabama had engaged and sunk the Vanderbilt.

The Polish question remains unchanged. The Poles were lately defeated in a conflict they had with the Russians. Their prospects don't seem to be improving much.

The Globe's Paris correspondent says, it is reported that sundry vessels modeled after the Alabama, are quietly building in the French ports. He also alludes to the canard that instructions have been sent to M. Mercier to protest against the continued recognition at Washington of the Juarez Mexican representative.

Seward, in responding to the address of the Anti-Slavery Conference at Manchester, to President Lincoln, says,—"these arguments furnish the President an additional motive to put down the insurrection."

The Advertiser's correspondence from Germany says Queen Victoria has addressed a letter to the King of Prussia, urging on him the advisability of a change of policy.

London, Aug. 27.—It is reported that the U. S. Minister, Mr. Dayton, has received instruction from his Government to protest against the French proceedings in Mexico.

It is stated that Mr. Slidel had a long interview with Drouyn de l'Huys on the 20th and 21st of August.

Cotton had advanced 1d. to 1¼.

The Bulletin in the Bank of England had increased £228,000.

American Stocks were upward and advancing.

Breadstuffs rather on the decline.

The Nomination for the Newcastle Division came off in the Victoria Hall, Cobourg, on Wednesday the 2nd instant. There were about 800 or 1,000 present. Mr. Burnham was nominated by Colonel Boswell and seconded by Mr. Ewing, of Percy. Mr. Clark was nominated by Mr. Armstrong of Millbrook, and seconded by Mr. John Fisher, of Haldimand. Both candidates addressed the assemblage after which a show of hands was taken. The Returning Officer being unable to tell on which side was the majority, then divided the crowd, but he was still unable to decide. A poll was finally demanded by both candidates; and the proceedings closed with the usual cheering for Queen, Returning Officer, and the candidates. Mr. Clark certainly has a good chance of being returned. The election comes off to-day and to-morrow.

The Fredericton Farmer says we have only recently became aware of the fact, that the barbarous and utterly worthless (in a reformatory sense) punishment of whipping, was revived in the British Army. We are creditably informed that there have been quite a number of such disgraceful scenes enacted in St. John very recently, and it is rumored that we are to have a case of the same kind in Fredericton in a few days; and as a refinement of heathenism, the young drummers are daily practised in the art of wielding the lash, and are themselves subject to punishment if they fail to lay it on with sufficient energy.

A Camp Meeting, under the management of the Wesleyan Methodists, at which all Evangelical Christians will be welcomed as fellow-worshippers and co-labourers, will commence (D. V.,) on the 18th instant, a little north of the Wesleyan Cemetery, in the Township of Smith. Tents will be provided to order by addressing Mr. Thos. McBurney, Peterboro'. All the Wesleyan Ministers in the District are pressed to attend, as the labors will principally devolve on local help. The Financial District Meeting is changed from the 29th to the 22nd, and to be held near the camp-ground.

Collectors of Inland Revenue.—Mr. C. E. Romaine has been gazetted Collector of Inland Revenue for the county of Wellington, in room of Mr. Thomas Saunder, discharged. Mr. George Snider ex-sheriff of Grey, has been appointed Collector of inland revenue for the same county, but has not yet been gazetted. Victoria and Peterboro have been separated into two Inland Revenue districts, and Mr. James B. Knowlson has been appointed Collector for Victoria.

The Countries adjoining the River Plata in South America continue in an agitated state. The Republic of Urguay especially was, at latest dates, devastated by civil war. Over the whole of the countries which were once Spanish America, there have been almost continual wars, and frequent revolutions, ever since they set up for themselves. The inhabitants seem to be completely unfit—socially or intellectually for self government.

We have been requested to say that the Union School intend having a Pic-Nic to-morrow. We hope the Parents of the Pupils, and the friends of the School generally, will turn out. Let all—Teachers, Pupils and Friends—"go in" to enjoy themselves, and we have no doubt there will be a good time of it.

The Republican Party has carried California by an immense majority. This will be a gain to the present administration of the United States. The people of the great gold State don't seem to have much sympathy with Slavery or Rebellion.

The London Times, in a late article, expresses the views that it is not for the benefit of Great Britain that vessels should be allowed to leave her ports for the purpose of preying upon American commerce. The London press, generally, enunciate the same opinion.

The Police Court in Toronto has been removed from the City Hall Building to the old Mechanic's Institute, which has been fitted up as a Court House. The change was much needed.

The Rochester, after Monday next, will leave Port Hope, on the usual mornings, at 3-30, a. m., instead of 10, a. m.

Affairs at the Capital.

[QUEBEC CORRESPONDENCE.]

Quebec, Sept. 5th, 1863.

The abrupt termination of my last letter for reasons since made to you, necessarily left much unsaid which, at the time, might have been interesting to you; but which, having since reached them through other sources, would now be useless to repeat.

This week has not been marked by any events of a thrilling nature. Monday was the first day on which any of the real business of the Session was attempted to be done, on which occasion a large number of Private Bills were introduced; many of them of considerable importance. In the course of the afternoon, the Premier, in answer to some enquiries upon that subject, made a clear and distinct announcement of the policy of the administration upon the Seat of Government question, to the effect that the Queen's decision was to be carried out; that the buildings at Ottawa were to be finished without delay; and that Parliament would continue to be held in Quebec until removed to Ottawa. This announcement appeared to be favorably received by a very large majority of the members; the only parties openly protesting being the Hon. George Brown and the two gentlemen who now represent the City of Toronto. These gentlemen were very indignant, and Mr. Brown moved for a Committee to enquire whether the building could be made ready for the Session of 1865, as announced by the Premier. Upon this question a considerable amount of discussion ensued and was finally disposed of by a motion to adjourn, which was carried by the casting vote of the Speaker.

The motion of Mr. Brown was perfectly useless, except as a salve to the disappointed of Toronto. It would have shelled nothing, added four or five thousand dollars to the present enormous contingent expenses of Legislation, and was, moreover an expression of distrust, which I think was altogether uncalled for.

Wednesday was a holiday, with a grand military review, which always attracts a large number of sight-seers, particularly of the opposite sex, who were, I am happy to say, largely and elegantly represented on that occasion. The Regular troops looked as British soldiers always look, "perfection." Their fine cleanly appearance, neatness of dress, and steadiness of manner, could not but impress you with their great superiority over dirty, half trained badly officered Militia. The volunteers of Quebec and Point Levi, appeared in large force, and made a very good appearance indeed. A few months more of efficient drill, will make these men all that is desirable in soldiers. The cavalry, also volunteers, were less efficient in drill, but much of this may be attributed to the difficulty of obtaining suitable horses—those used here being chiefly hacks from the Livery Stables—more fit for the cross thins for cavalry service. I had long entertained the opinion that Volunteer Cavalry Corps can only be successfully raised from the several districts in the neighborhood of Towns, where you can get the yeomen of the country, who have and are able to keep fine horses to that purpose; and in no part of Canada do I think so fine a body of well mounted men could be obtained as from the Townships immediately surrounding Peterborough.

Yesterday was mostly occupied (being Government day) with the introduction of the Militia Bill, which the Premier announced to be entirely different from the one of last year. It leaves the law of 1854 untouched, and engrafts the new upon it. The Bill will be printed and in the hands of members on Monday, until which, it would perhaps be unfair to express any opinion. I hope the measure, taken as a whole, may be what the country requires; though, I confess, I have my fears of it.

Since the taking of the vote upon Mr. Sicotte's amendment, and the final passing of the Address, there have been constant whisperings about the weakness of the Ministry, and the probabilities of a reconstruction; which reports were, of course, much strengthened by the announcement of Mowat's resignation, and subsequent return to office. There is one thing certain, they have gained no strength, and it is doubtful if they will. Many of their supporters are dissatisfied—having been promised too much—were spoiled at the start. In a word, I may tell you, that an opinion prevails here, that the Session (perhaps not a week) will pass over, before a break up will take place and a new Ministry formed, in which there will be a large infusion of new blood—taken from both sides of the House. If this can be done, the business of the country will be, for a time, at all events, satisfactorily carried on.

We have been favored with a visit from Lord Lyons who, I noticed, was present at the review on Wednesday. His Lordship is now on a visit to the River Saguenay, from which he will return in a few days. As to the nature of his business here (if he has any) nothing has transpired.

The water of the Ohio has turned quite deep green, and is covered with a scum of the same color, so far up the river as Cincinnati. The cause is a perfect mystery, even to that wonderfully wise and ubiquitous person—the "oldest inhabitant."

Peaches are going to be Cheap.—One of the editors of the Chicago Tribune has been to St. Joseph, Michigan, and gives as the result of his observations;—"The yield of fruit this season will be the largest ever known in Michigan. In 1861, the peach crop yielded about 60,000 baskets; last year, owing to the severe frost in May, it reached only about 40,000 baskets; from the estimate given by the most extensive fruit growers, the peach crop this year will amount to from 300,000 to 500,000 baskets.

That is all very fine, but the way we Northerners have to pay for peaches, scrubby ones at that, one would think that peaches were cheap enough. Send them along—cheap and good.

Captain Mellor, owner of the steamboat Zimmerman, lately burned at Niagara, having failed to get a boat at Montreal to replace the Zimmerman, has made arrangements with Mr. Shickelana, of St. Catherines. She will be ready in December.

We observe in our American exchanges the death of the Hon. George C. Bronson, a noted American politician.

Communications.

MILLENARIISM.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Knowing that your excellent journal is open to communications on all subjects connected with man's temporal and spiritual welfare, I herewith send a few thoughts on "Millenarism," at present occupying the attention of not a few in and around Peterborough.

Millenarians assert, concerning the resurrection of the righteous dead, that there will be a Resurrection before the Millennium, and take as their proof text, Rev. 20:3, "And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither have received his mark," &c., and refer to first Thess., 4:16, 17, "And the dead in Christ shall rise first; and then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up," &c. In the text first quoted Millenarians generally find proof for the pre-millennial resurrection of the saints. But is this a literal exposition. The passage does not say this. It says nothing of the rising of bodies at all! It is the souls of which the text speaks. Again, it is the souls of them that were "beheaded." It says nothing of all the saints—provided we adhere to the interpretation of the letter—only of the "beheaded." The whole passage is figurative.

The Judgment Day; this has ever been a difficulty with the pre-millennialists. It is very plain that the "last judgment" and the coming of Christ are synchronous.—But does the "Millennium" follow the Day of Judgment? Millenarians contend that the Day of Judgment is a period—an age—many years. That it is a day of 24 hours, we do not suppose; but that it is a day of reckoning and settlement with all mankind, we think is as plainly expressed as any truth can be. Millenarians affirm that it is not "an amize." See Matt. 25, 2nd Thess. 1, Rev. 20; read also Matt. 25:31, 32. The reading of these looks very like an amize. Millenarians generally maintain that the "Judgment Day" is something very different from the usual idea of it. It is social, they maintain.—They see no "general judgment" such as the Christian Church has ever found in the Bible. Their "Day of Judgment," last and final, is the period of the overthrow of existing powers of the world, including the devil. Surely no attentive reader of his Bible, Mr. Editor, needs any assistance in confuting such teachings.

Somewhere, also, in the Millenarian scheme, the Jews appear as a restored nation, inhabiting again the land of their fathers, with their temple and altars, occupying the chief place among the nations, invested with special honors, and Jerusalem the capital. In this they are perfectly consistent. If Jerusalem, which has the promises—the glorious promises—of Isa. 60, is the literal Jerusalem, as Millenarians affirm, then there must be "temples and altars," and consequently sacrifices, and offerings, and priests; and the "rams of Nabaioth," must come up upon these altars, and we will have that entire 'old covenant,' with its 'beggarly elements,' which Paul has shown to have waxed old and vanished away."

How strange! that any spiritually minded man can see in the far-reaching promise of the Old Testament its descriptions of a magnificent city and holy people, only the Jew, and leave out of sight that assembly, the glorious city which Christ came to gather and establish on earth and ultimately in heaven! one see in the "seed of Abraham," in whom the nations are to be blessed, the seed of Abraham according to the flesh; and this when in Rom. 9th, Paul reiterates so often, in vindication of the rejection of the Jews, the fundamental truth that the promises were made not to the children of Abrahaham by ordinary generation, but to the children of promise.

Otonabee, 5th Sept., 1863.

Position of the Premier.

From the Mercury.

The Premier may take to himself all the consolation that springs from the fact that he is at this moment one of the best abused men in Canada. No public man ever had more epithets thrown at him during the same period; and none was ever made the subject of more falsehood or more slanderous insinuations. In parliament, the opposition are furious against him. From the old apostle of fraud and corruption down to those whose conversion dates no further back than their removal from office, in May last—all appear intent upon defaming him, and doing their utmost to depreciate his influence. Perhaps we ought to say that in this discreditable business the old corruptionist leaders are comparatively moderate, observing as they must with what zeal their new disciple Mr. McGee, engages in a task for which his temper preeminently adapts him. So far as assault proceeding from this quarter are concerned, Mr. Seafield Macdonald should feel no surprise. Reviling and abusing Messrs. Holton and Dorion, who may be said to have nursed him into political existence when he came an adventurer from the States. Mr. McGee cannot be reasonably expected to evince more consideration for the Premier, who gave to him the status conferred by office, and whom he would have been content to follow till doomsday had the enforced resignation not intervened. To attacks emanating from such a source, Mr. Sanfield Macdonald can afford to remain indifferent. Their bitterness flows too obviously from baffled ambition, their malignity too directly from personal mortification and disappointment, to allow of either affecting mischief. And as it is with Mr. McGee's abuse, so it is with the falsehoods and misrepresentation in which other of the opponents indulge. Their desire was to bring about an alliance with Mr. Macdonald; their hopes centred in an expectation that he might be induced to unite his political fortunes with theirs; and they are incensed beyond measure because he steadfastly adhered to the reform party. From enemies of this class, therefore, he need fear no harm. The public understood right well that the influence they depreciate and the character they malign were sought for eagerly by the corruptionists; and this being the construction which the country places upon the motives of his assailants, Mr. Macdonald may safely laugh at and despise them.

A Popular Sovereign.—On Saturday, the foundation-stone of a palace, to be presented by the province of West Flanders to the King of the Belgians, was laid at Ostend by the King himself. After an address expressive of the gratitude of the people for his wise and beneficent rule, and pressed his affection for his people, and said:—"A reign of 32 years is already long; I shall continue to devote myself to securing the national independence, the free institutions, and the happiness of my country." At the termination of the ceremony the King and royal family withdrew amid vociferous cheering of the multitude assembled.

A Man makes his last Will and Speaks his Mind.

A short time since Mr. William Dunlop, of Gairbraid, Colborne Township, C. W., departed this life, leaving the following as his last will and testament. It is now contested in Chancery in the district of Huron, on the grounds that its author was insane. There was certainly some sense in his whims, as may be seen from the copy of the will:

In the name of God, Amen. I William Dunlop, of Gairbraid, in the Township of Colborne, and district of Huron, Western Canada, Esq., being in sound health, and my mind just as usual, which my friends who flatter me say is no great shakes at the best of times, do make this my last will and testament, as follows:

Revoking of course all former wills, I leave the property of Gairbraid and all other landed property I may die possessed of, to my sisters Ellen Boyle Story and Elizabeth Boyle Dunlop, the former because she is married to a minister whom (God help him) she bespeaks, the latter because she is married to nobody nor is she like to be, for she is an old maid and not marketripe; and also I leave to them and their heirs my share of the stock and implements of the farm; provided always, that the enclosure round my brother's grave be reserved, and if either should die without issue, then the other to inherit the whole. I leave to my sister-in-law, Louisa Dunlop, all my share of the household furniture, and such traps, with the exceptions hereinafter mentioned. I leave my silver tankard to the oldest son of old John, as the representative of the family; I would have left it to old John himself, but he would melt it down to make temperance medals, and that would be sacrilege; however, I leave my horn snuff box to him; he can only make temperance horn spoons with that.

I leave my sister Jenny my Bible, formerly the property of my great-great grandmother, Bertha Hamilton, of Woodhall, and when she knows as much of the spirit of it as she does of the letter, she will be another Christian than she is.

I also leave my brother's watch to my brother Sandy, exhorting him at the same time to give up waggery, radicalism, and all other sins that do most easily beset him.

I leave my brother Allen my big silver snuff box, as I am informed he is rather a decent Christian, with a snug belly and a jolly face.

I leave person Cherassie (Maggie's husband) the small box I got from the Sarnia Militia, as a small gratitude for the service he has done the family in taking a sister that no man of taste would have taken.

I leave John Cadeel a silver teapot, to the end that he may drink tea therefrom to comfort him from the affliction of a shatterly wife.

I leave my books to my brother Andrew, because he has been so long a jaugly watch that he may learn to read with them.

I give my silver cup with a sovereign in it, to my sister Janet Graham Dunlop, because she is an old maid and pious, and therefore will necessarily take to horning, and also my granny's snuff shell, as it looks decent to see an old woman taking snuff.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal, the thirty-first day of August, in the year of Our Lord one thousand and eight hundred and forty two.

W. DUNLOP.

Cost of Modern Navies.

The French naval architect, M. Xavier Raymond, in his book on "Les Marines de la France et de l'Angleterre," describes the enormous cost of modern navies, as compared with those of other times, when sailing vessels alone were employed. In the days of Nelson, it was calculated that the number of guns carried was a criterion of the cost of a vessel, and that the cost of each gun was £1,000 (about $5,000.) For steam wooden frigates, the cost per gun is now rated at from £5,000 to £6,000, and for iron-plated frigates it exceeds £10,000. Again, the expense of maintaining a modern steam frigate is almost fabulous compared with the old sailing craft. The Edinburg Review states that the Warrior frigate, ready for sea, represents £400,000 ($2,000,000) of the public money; while the Minotaur now building, and to be covered with 5½-inch plates will represent $2,500,000. As this thickness of plates has been shattered by guns already in existence, it is now proposed to build other vessels with 8 and 10 inch plating, in which case a single ship will cost about $3,000,000! The Review says, "The Americans are confident that they can carry sail work at sea 15-inch guns, throwing 450 lb shot, with charges of powder sufficient to pierce and destroy a ship's side composed of 36 inches solid oak and 1 inch of iron lining, protected with 5½-inch plates. They have destroyed such a target at 100 yards distance, and they have done this with cast-iron guns and cast-iron shot. It will not do to shut our eyes to such eventualities. In designing these additional iron clads, which it is too evident England will be compelled to build, the increasing difficulties of the question must be fairly considered and the magnitude of the cost boldly confronted." In our opinion such huge iron-clad war ships now proposed for the British navy, might be very efficient at sea against inferior vessels; but in most cases they would be useless in America, for attacks on harbor fortifications or batteries, owing to their great draft of water—ranging from 28 to 30 feet. They would not be able to come within a range of ten miles from New York city.—Scientific American.

The Mexican Expedition.

The Emperor is said to have told Marshall (then plain General) Forey, when he was about to start for Mexico, that he was undertaking "la plus grosse affaire de mon regne." I believe I am not solitary in my opinion that it will prove the most disastrous event of this reign. Its unpopularity is wide-spread and invincible. Nothing appears to render it palatable to the country. Wrap it up in plebiscites, set it ablaze with rockets and Bengal lights, promise untold riches from its mines, dress up the subject in any way you like, the people, to use a common phrase, won't have it. I for one utterly refuse to believe that the Mexican question forms a part of any vast scheme in the teeming brain of the French Emperor. I look upon the Mexican expedition as a solitary fact—one of the many desperate and reckless throws of the political dice which we have witnessed, and probably shall yet witness, during this adventurous reign, and I anticipate that each new phase of the "occupation" will be marked by new and increasing difficulties. For instance, here is this blockade question. Already we learn the seizure of an English ship, the "Carolina Goodyear," by the French steam frigate "Panama." The complications which have arisen between us and our American cousins are at hand to show us how great are the risks of ill blood in those questions of blockade.—Cor. London Times.

The Emperor Vindicated.

We can have no hesitation in asserting that the Republic of Mexico has deserved its doom; that its rights were forfeited, and that, whatever may be the end of the affair, the Mexicans have no complaint against France, and no title to the sympathies of Europe. So notorious, indeed, are these facts that they have been universally accepted on both sides of the Atlantic, though France has been left by the course of events to act upon them alone. It is of much importance that this should be remembered Strictly speaking, the French army, though composed exclusively of French soldiers, did but represent what is called "troops of execution" in the administration of confederate Germany. The sentence of Europe had gone forth against Mexico, and she was put under the ban of Christendom. So regarded the actual judgment on her offences, England and Spain were not only of one accord with France but were originally engaged even in the execution of the sentence. It is not conceivable that under any government whatever the Mexicans should fail of being better ruled than before, and if France and Austria can make Mexico a state in which life and property are secure, and public obligations respected, they will certainly leave Europe and Mexico their debtors.

Southern Expectations.

The North is already improving its victory before it has thoroughly achieved it. But the South is standing its ground manfully, and looks to France or Mexico for a chance of restoring its waning power and turning the tide of its adverse fortune.

"Mexico," they say at Richmond, "is as completely in the hands of France at this day as India was in the hands of the English one hundred years ago. Napoleon is the master there; nothing will be done that he does not will, and everything he wills will be done. The French will be the best neighbors for us we could possibly have. They will be compelled to introduce negro slavery there: they cannot otherwise develop the immense resources of the country. They will keep abolitionists from settling on our southern frontier. We shall strike up an immense trade with them, and the peoples will form an alliance offensive and defensive which will set the world at defiance."

Scientific Paradoxes.

The water which devours us—a fleeted stream, can be walked on as ice. The bullet which, fired from a musket, carries death, will be harmless if ground to dust before being fired. The crystalized part of the oil of roses—so grateful in its fragrance—a solid at ordinary temperatures, though readily volatile—is a compound substance, containing exactly the same elements and in exactly the same proportions, as the gas with which we light our streets. The tea which we daily drink, with benefit and pleasure, produces palpitations, nervous tremblings and even paralysis, if taken in excess; yet the peculiar organic agent called theine, to which tea owes its qualities, may be taken by itself, (as theine not as tea) without any appreciable effect. The water which will allay our burning thirst, augments it when congealed into snow; so that Capt. Ross declares the natives of the Arctic regions "prefer enduring the utmost extremity of thirst, rather than to attempt to remove it by eating snow." Yet if the snow be melted it becomes drinkable water. Nevertheless, although, if melted before entering the mouth it assuages thirst like other water. To render this paradox more striking we have only to remember that ice which melts more slowly in the mouth, is every efficient in allaying thirst.

Another Volunteer Review.

The people of Amherstburg have been up and doing in the matter of having a military display in their locality. They have subscribed a liberal sum of money towards defraying the expenses incident to such a turn out, and have invited their brother volunteers of Essex and Kent to join us in a review on the 24th inst.

A Suggestive Paragraph.—A contemporary makes the following sensible remarks, which will be fully understood by all inquiring and intelligent minds:—

Small is the sum that is required to patronize a newspaper, and most amply remunerated is the patron. I care not how humble and unpretending the gazette is which he takes, it is next to impossible to fill a sheet fifty-two times a year without putting something into it that is worth the subscription price. Every parent whose son is off to school should be supplied with a newspaper. I well remember what a difference there was between those of my schoolfellows who had and those who had not access to newspapers. Other things being equal, the first were decidedly superior to the last, in debate and composition at least.

The reason is plain; they had command of more facts. A newspaper is a history of current events, as well as a curious and interesting miscellany, which youth will peruse with delight when they will read nothing else.

A correspondent of the Witness cavils at the statement in this journal that the bribe offered by Ministers to the Grand Trunk for its support was equivalent to a million of dollars. The difference between $70 a mile annually then paid, and $150 offered capitalized would be a million of dollars.—Commercial Advertizer.

It might have been supposed that the speech of Mr. Shanly, dictated as it was by a more intimate practical knowledge of railway matters than is possessed by other members of the House, one only excepted, would have shamed the slander about bribery out of existence. The old rate—$70 per mile—is excluded from the account by the fact that the rate now fixed is $100; the difference between the latter sum and the $150 originally talked of being, therefore, the only difference that can be taken into consideration. Mr. Shanly's statement is, that the $100 rate hereafter to be paid is as advantageous for the railway company as the $150, seeing that the payment of the latter was contingent upon the performance of additional services, which are not now to be rendered. Mr. Shanly's declaration stands on record in opposition to a partisan invention, and the province may be safely left to judge between them. Nevertheless opposition newspapers will persist in printing the imputation, despite its notorious falsity.—Mercury.

Teetotalism forbids a man touching anything that can intoxicate except a pretty girls lips, which you may taste after signing the pledge, providing you do so decreetly and with moderation, but the "Comerian Pain Destroyer" is highly recommended and is a sure cure for colds, rheumatism, pains in the side and the back, tooth-ache, summer complaints, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers, at 25 cents a bottle.

FALL IMPORTATIONS.

We solicit attention to the new Autumn Goods, now opening at MR. CLENTON'S Establishment in this Town. His Stock is large and complete, including every variety of Fancy and Staple Dry Goods. It is his intention to make continual additions to the stock during the Fall, so that his customers may be able to obtain in Peterborough the new designs and styles as they appear in the markets. His goods are bought on favorable terms, and he can offer inducements to intending purchasers.

We recommend our friends to buy his fresh Teas, they are good and cheap. We need say nothing about his Millinery Department, as it is already so well known for choice and beautiful articles in that line.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

The most certain and speedy remedy ever discover ed for all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult breathing, Sore throat &c. &c. &c.

THESE WAFERS give the most instantaneous and perfect relief and when perseverred with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are equally a blessing and a cure—none need despair, no matter how long the disease may have existed, however certain it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

TO Vocalists and Public Speakers, these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional vocalists

$10,000 WORTH OF GROCERIES.

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber has opened a new store in the building lately occupied by R. E. McDougall, where he offers for sale a large and well selected assortment of GROCERIES, consisting in part of

SUGARS OF ALL KINDS.

Teas, Coffee, Spice, Rice, Tobacco,

COAL OIL LAMPS,

OF THE MOST IMPROVED KINDS,

COAL OIL, AMERICAN STONE WARE,

OF EVERY VARIETY,

And other articles too numerous to mention.

Well knowing [after an experience of twenty years in the trade] that the "nimble sixpence is better than the slow shilling," he will sell for small profits, having bought his stock with CASH he is confident that he can sell goods for ready pay cheaper than any other merchant in Peterboro'. As the goods offered for sale by the undersigned are all paid for, he does not confine himself to selling them "cheap for cash only," he will cheerfully exchange them for all kinds of country produce, at cash prices. The subscriber does not attempt to enumerate all the articles which he offers for sale.

☞ Call and examine the goods and see how cheap the "yankee" can sell them.

SELECT POETRY

THE CART BEFORE THE HORSE.

O, for some dear secluded dell,
Where [illegible] may rest
To [illegible] part of grass—
No—I mean a spot of peace.

[illegible] a house by Fifth's ware,
With not a friend to mar life's blot,
Love a cannot have a slot,—
No—by the Shannon haven a cot.

Is it fair that rocks lie around,
That wide expanse to scorn it o'er;
I crave a shiver with a roar—
No—I mean a river with a shore!

To [illegible] sweet at moonlight's mystic hour,
To wander forth where few frequent,
And come upon a tipsy gent—
No, no—I mean a gipsy tent.

Beneath a shading sycamore,
How sweet to breathe love's tender vow:
Your dear one bitten by a sow—
No—I mean sitting by a bough!

Or, sweet with your fond wife to sit
Outside your door at daylight's close;
While she's fast hitting at your nose—
While she's hard knitting at your nose.

Perhaps on early cares you brood,
While sympathy her sweet face shows;
That good to walk upon one's toes—
No—I mean to talk upon one's woes!

Ah! now you watch the fairy shape,
A summer dress which does adorn:
Admiring much her laugh of scorn—
No, no—I mean her scarf of lawn!

VARIETIES.

There are men who chew misfortunes as cows chew thistles.

Law is the buoy of the good citizen—the rock of the bad one.

Temper is so good a thing that we should not lose it.

Persons often lack courage to appear as good as they really are.

Talent and virtue are less frequently hereditary than the gout.

There are many graceless preachers on grace—many uncharitable ones on charity.

Mortified pride often takes the name and guise of a broken heart.

There is such a tremendous crop of oats in Cumberland County, Ill., that they are selling for ten cents a bushel.

The young fellow whose girl told her she didn't want him any longer, wears a 56 lb. weight in his hat, to prevent him from growing any longer.

'What is 'shew bread,' aunt?' 'Why, Isaac,' said Mrs. Partington, 'shoe bred' is that which people earn by making of shoes. There's plenty of it in Lynn.'

It is a very remarkable fact that however well young ladies are versed in grammer, very few of them can decline matrimony.

Bayard Taylor, after all, is only a journey-man printer, and his 'Tales of a Traveller' might just as truly be termed 'Travels of a Taylor.'

Mrs. Fautadling says, if it were not intended that women should drive their husbands, why are they put through the bridle ceremony?

All who have meditated on the art of governing mankind have been convinced that the fate of empires depend on the education of youth.

A chairman went into a fancy-goods store and asked for some consistency. He had heard consistency was a jewel, and he wanted a specimen.

Benevolent impulses, where we should not expect them, in modest privacy, exact many a scene of beatiful wonder amidst the plaudits of angel.

Persons who are always cheerful and good humored, are very useful in the world; they maintain peace and happiness, and spread a thankful temper among all who live around them.

It was a smart boy who owned up, that he liked everything good, but a good whipping. The same boy liked a good rainy day, too rainy to go to shool, and just rainy enough to go fishing.

One of the hardest trials of those who fall from affluence and honor and to poverty obscurity, is the discovery that the attachment of so many in whom they confided was a pretence, a mark to gain their own ends, or was a miserable shallowness.

A genius once undertook to name and classify the different sorts of fools in this world. 'First, the ordinary fool; second, the fool who is one and don't know it; third, the fool, who is not satisfied with being a fool in reality, but undertakes in addition, to play the fool.'

In a school district, a lady having engaged to teach school for a given time, attends regularly at the school-house from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., and keeps up a good fire, although she has not had a scholar for weeks. She seems determined to be on hand whether 'school kept or not.'

An old soldier whose nose had been creeped off by a sabre cut, happened to give a few pence to a beggar, who exclaimed in return, 'God preserve your eyesight.' 'Why so?' inquired the veteran. 'Because sir,' he replied, 'if your eyes should grow weak, you couldn't keep spectacles on them.'

Great probity is not essentially necessary for the support of a monarchy or despotic government. The force of laws in the former, in the latter the arm of the prince lifted up, commands all. In a popular government, another engine is necessary, virtue; because nothing else will keep up the execution of the laws and the practice of what is right.

WHAT you are to be hereafter you must begin to be now. The smallest seed committed to the ground contains the element of the future tree or plant. If you want to be an angel in heaven, you must begin to plume your wings now, for it takes a long time to soar so high.

A GOOD STORY.—An anecdote worth laughing at is told of a man who had an infirmity as well as an appetite for fish. He was anxious to keep up his character for honesty even while enjoying his favorite meal; and while making a bill with his merchant, as the story goes, slipped a codfish under his coat tail. But the garment was too short to cover the theft, and the merchant at once perceived it.

'Now,' said the customer, anxious to improve all opportunities to call attention to his virtues 'Mr. Merchant, I have traded with you a good deal, and have always paid you up honestly and promptly, have't I?'

'O yes,' said the merchant; 'I make no complaint.

'Well,' said the customer, 'I always insist that honesty is the best of policy, and the best rule to live and die by.'

'That's so,' replied the merchant; and the customer turned to depart.

'Hold on, replied the merchant; and the customer turned to depart.

'Hold on, friend,' cried the merchant.—'Speaking of honesty, I have a bit of advice to give you: Whenever you come to trade again, you had better wear a longer coat or steal a shorter fish.'

Poetry.

MACHINERY MARRIAGE.

Oh would there in this world be found
Some little spot of Fancy ground,
Where without Machinery's aid,
Without the Printing Press's trade,
Some kindly heart and mind would be,
Which in it, to Poetry flee;
Then would the Muse delighted rove,
And be attended ever.

Prosaic spot ever vainly tried,
Dame Fancy might claim it as her own,
And in it she might fix her throne,
For ever and for ever;
There like a queen might reign and live,
While every one would forgive
The little slights they might receive,
And be attended ever.

The mischief-makers that remove
Far from our hearts the warmth of love,
And lead us all to disapprove
What gives another pleasure;
They seem to take one's part—but when
They've heard our cares, unkindly then
They once retail them off again,
Mixed with their poisonous measure.

And then they've such a cunning way,
Of telling ill-meant tales, they say—
"Don't mention what I've said, I pray,
I would not tell another."
Straight to their pastor's house they go,
Telling more than the really know,
And break the peace of high and low,
With, husband, friend and brother.

Oh, that the mischief-making crew,
Were all reduced to one or two,
And they all painted red or blue,
That every one might know them!
Then would our villagers forget
To rage and quarrel, fume and fret,
And fall into an angry pet,
With things so much below them.

For 'tis a sad degrading part
To make another's bosom smart,
And plant a dagger in the heart
We ought to love and cherish.
Then let us evermore be found
In quietness with all around,
While friendship, joy, and peace abound
And angry feelings perish!

Miscellaneous.

The Contemplated Ottawa Ship Canal,

ITS IMPORTANCE TO THE INTERESTS OF THE WEST.

(From the Milwaukee Sentinel.)

In the midst of the excitement of the war, and at the outset of our internal political campaign, it may seem rather out of opportune occasion to advocate or call attention to schemes of internal improvements; but the agricultural North-west, however, where the cheapening of the cost of export of our cereal products is becoming a vital question, on occasion for urging enterprises which will accomplish this result, can be inopportune. The projected Ottawa Ship Canal is, perhaps, the most feasible and important of all the schemes for effecting this reduction of the cost for export, which is now before the public, and some of our foremost business men have asked us to call attention to the merits and importance of this canal.

But few of our citizens are aware that for the small sum of $12,500,0000 (small as compared to the great benefits and advantages to be derived from the construction of the work in question) an artificial water course can be obtained between the lakes and the tide water which will allow of the free and ready passage of vessels of twelve feet draft of water. And yet such is the case.

For £2,500,000 sterling a Ship Canal can be constructed from Georgian Bay upon Lake Huron to Montreal, via Lake Nipissing and the French Mattawan and Ottawa rivers, which shall place Milwaukee by water 90 miles nearer to Montreal than it is to Buffalo—nearly 600 miles nearer to Montreal than it is to New York, and about 1,000 miles nearer to Liverpool than by any other water communication—a Ship Canal having but 38 miles of artificial navigation on the whole route of which 31 miles are already constructed, and only require enlarging to allow of the passage of the s he to which we have already alluded. The distance from Milwaukee to Montreal by this proposed course is 820 miles, as follows:

From Milwaukee to the mouth of French River on Georgian Bay	390 miles.
French River	50 miles.
Lake Nipissing	80 miles.
Mattawan River	66 miles.
Ottawa River to Montreal	206 miles.

The distance from Milwaukee to Buffalo via the lakes and rivers is 910 miles.

One can rapidly see, therefore, that with this projected work completed—having but 56 miles of canal navigation to overcome on the entire route—grain can be laid down in Montreal, which our readers are aware is at the head of the ocean navigation on the St. Lawrence, and which is at all times equally as good a transhipping market as that of New York, in almost the same time which it now requires to place it in Buffalo. In other words, by this contemplated route, grain, pork, &c., can be placed on shipboard at Montreal bound for Liverpool or other foreign markets, as the case may be, in about five days from Milwaukee, thus not only placing the products of this country in a condition equally as good as that of New York, in one quarter of the time required to transport those products to that market, but also at one-third the expense.

The saving of time as well as of canal freight upon the Erie Canal, which ranges from 15 to 30c. pr. bu. in grain, and which is an item of vast importance to the interests of this western country, amounting as it does upon the annual crop of the seven producing states of the West to but little, if any, short of seventy millions of dollars annually, is by no means the only saving, important as that is, which this proposed route effects. It would save millions of dollars annually to the way of dealings to those producers, which is now actually wasted and thrown away by the exposure to which they are now subjected between Buffalo and New York, by the combined action of the two, at a time is close, but intermediate the Erie Canal, stopped during the winter, from the rest of a burning coal, until their prices is effectually bounded from ten to thirty cents per bushel. This saving of the West, is also one from which it will be exempt by the cheaper route which it offers. Now, if this saving alone would be sufficient to warrant the construction of the work, it is also one from which it will be exempt by the cheaper route which it offers. Now, if this saving alone would be sufficient to warrant the construction of the work, it is also one from which it will be exempt by the cheaper route which it offers.

It would not only place in the hands of our producers the entire cost now paid to the way of freight from Buffalo to New York, but it would enhance the value of every foot of real estate in the great producing States of the West, at least twenty per cent, with our $42,000,000 of acres of land in these named States, not over one-fifth of this area is to-day under improvement. With our dermal crop increasing, as it has from 185,000,000, bushels in 1860 and less than 300,000,000 in 1861, to not less than 700,000,000 in 1863 this channel will soon become an absolute necessity, and we only wonder why active steps are not being taken to secure its accomplishment. Of no less importance is it to the growing interests of Montreal. With this channel open for the reception of the vast volume of our products, Montreal, instead of New York, would be the great breadstuff depot and market for this continent.

Important from Japan.

The N. Y. Tribune has letters from Kanagawa up to the 24th of June, at which date the prospect of immediate hostilities commencing appeared to be less certain than before. The reported destruction of the residence of the American Minister is fully confirmed; and the circumstances connected with it leave scarcely a doubt that it was the result of a conspiracy, whose object is the expulsion of all Foreigners. The fire broke out in an unused part of the building, and after a rainy day. Mr. Pruyn remained long enough at Yeddo to make arrangements for another residence, after which he temporarily withdrew to Yokohama.

The chopping and changing in the course of Japanese policy continued to be marked as before. The Tycoon's government had pledged itself to pay the English Charge the first instalment of the Richardson indemnity on the 15th of June; but the day passed without the payment of a single coin. The Governor of Kanagawa expressed his regret at the circumstance but stated that he had been positively instructed by the Tycoon to hold back the money, otherwise he should lose his head for disobedience. Colonel Neale at once shut up his office, declaring all negotiations closed, and warning the British and other foreign residents to look out for themselves. At the same time he gave instructions to Admiral Kuper to prepare for coercive measures. Next day the Admiral announced that he would not commence hostilities before the 20th, in order to give those who desired an opportunity of leaving the country.

Meantime the Japanese began to take alarm. Through the agents of other governments they offered explanation that the Tycoon government was still actuated by friendly sentiments towards foreigners.—Unfortunately it soon transpired that the functionary was de facto a prisoner in the hands of the satsiui chiefs at Miaco, where he had been forced to sign an order of non-compliance with British demands. Abundant promises were made by the Japanese that hostilities should not begin on their part, and that the people of Yokohama should attend to their usual occupations.

While these matters were in progress, reinforcements were ordered up by Admiral Kuper from China, and a large fleet was collected in the neighborhood of Kanagawa. The French Admiral, who had been at one time somewhat disgusted at the tedious negotiations, engaged to hold Yokohama to the last extremity.

But on the 24th the wind turned once more on the capital, for on that afternoon the sum of $300,000 was paid as part of the indemnity to the British legation, with a promise to pay the balance of the claim (about $200,000) on the following day. The result has not been learned; but it seems probable that the Tycoon and his Diamios have yielded to the pressure brought to bear by the allies.

The Japanese dispute has suddenly assumed a new phase, so far as this country is concerned. Aside from the destruction of the American residency, there can be little doubt that a great conspiracy had been formed against the life of the American Minister, with all the members of his embassy. It thus appears that if the revolutionary part had succeeded, they would have no better than the Europeans, who were supposed to incur the natives ill-feeling by their arrogant bearings towards them.

READING ALOUD.—There it no treat so great, truly remarks the Springfield Republican, as to hear good reading of any kind. Not one gentleman in a hundred can read so as to please the ear, and mind the words with gentle force to the understanding. An indistinct utterance, whines, drones, nasal twangs, guttural notes, hesitations, and other vices of elocution are almost universal. Why it is, no one can say, unless it be that either the pulpit, or the nursery, or the Sunday School, gives the style to these days. Many a lady can sing Italian songs with considerable exactness, but cannot read English gramatically. Yet reading is for the most valuable accomplishment of the two. In most drawing-rooms, if a thing is to be read; one has weak lungs, another gets hoarse, another has an objectionable sing-song accidently a tradition of the way in which Watts's hymns were sung, when he was too young to understand them; another remains like a hand-about wagon; another has a way of reading which seems to proclaim that what is said is of no consequence, and had better not be attended to.

The Canadian Militia.

The subject of Union still in the country, provokes a strong opposition against a proposition to form a militia system, which, if carried out, would be a great boon to the country. The militia system, as at present constituted, is a heavy tax upon the people, and is of no practical benefit to the country. Common Schools in Upper Canada.

The Rev. Dr. Ryerson's report for 1862 shows that the whole number of educational institutions of every kind was 4,554—increase 93. The whole amount available for educational purposes was $1,109,216—increase $33,182. The whole number of pupils attending the schools was 243,733; being an increase of 13,815. The number returned as indigent pupils was 5,092; being a decrease of 574. The number of children of school age reported as not attending any school was 92,318, being a decrease of 5,457. The number of schools partly free is 876; being a decrease of 141. The number of schools in which a fee of twenty-five cents per month for each pupil is paid (the highest fee permitted by law) is only 117. The number of schools opened and closed with prayer was 2,576—increase 195. The number of schools in which the Bible or Testament is used was 2,722—increase, 43; being nearly three-fourths of all the Common Schools in Upper Canada. The number of Roman Catholics Separate Schools reported is 109—the same as that of the preceding year.

According to the returns there are 4,606 teachers employed in the schools. Of these 2,119 are male teachers. They are of the following religious denominations:—Church of England, 818; Church of Rome, 484; Presbyterians, 1,287; Methodists, 1,288; Baptists, 218; Congregationalists, 67; Lutherans, 32; Quakers, 22; Christian Disciples, 24; reported as Protestants, 67; other persuasions, 42; not reported, 57. The number of teachers employed holding first class Normal School or Provincial Certificates was 201; holding second class Normal School Certificates, 778. The number of teachers holding first class County Board Certificates was 4,191; holding second class County Board Certificates, 1,985; holding third class County Board Certificates, 620; unclassified, 128. The whole number of teachers holding certificates of qualification was 4,279. The lowest salary paid any teacher in a County was $80; highest salary, $600. The average salary of male teachers in a County, with board, $174—without board, $263; of a female teacher, with board, $132—without board, 170. In Cities the highest salary paid a teacher was $900—the lowest, $240. The average salary of male teachers was $471—of female teachers, $242. In Villages the highest salary was $800 and the lowest $140—the average being $410 for males and $188 for females.

The number of Sunday School Libraries reported is 1,969; containing 301,719 volumes. The number of other Public Libraries reported is 369, containing 116,-886 volumes. Total number of Sunday School and other Public Libraries 2,338, containing 667,464 volumes, or nearly one volume for every two inhabitants (old and young) of the country.

WHAT IS POVERTY?—Bulwer says that poverty is only an idea to make cases out of ten. Some men with ten thousand dollars a year suffer more for want of means than others with three hundred. The reason is, the richer man has artificial wants; his income is ten thousand, and by habit he spends twelve or fifteen thousand, and he suffers anguish, from being drawn for unpaid debts, to kill a sensitive man. A man who earns a dollar a day and does not run in debt, is the happier of the two. Very few people who have never been rich will not believe this, but it is true. There are people of course, who are wealthy and enjoy their wealth, but there are thousands upon thousands with princely incomes who never know a moment's peace, because they live above their means.

BAKING A STEAMER BY BALLOONS.—M. Bauer, an engineer, has after long preparatory labors, succeeded in raising the Bavarian steamer Ludwig, which sank two years ago in the Lake of Constance, in consequence of coming into collision with a bigger steamer. The engineers, in order to raise the vessel, which was lying at the depth of seventy feet, made use of an apparatus of his own invention. By means of divers, he attached to her sides two large hollows made of water-proof linen which he filled with air. When the expansive and buoyant influence of a mercurial gas observed in the water which looked as if boiling, and the vessel gradually came to the surface.

A Regal.

At a village on the Welsh coast, where they had to bring all their water from a well, one or more horse had a regular. At all hours of the day, but evening figures preponderated before the time they had kept quiet, often enlisted; but very active, might be seen in any numbers, passing along a narrow lane with every kind of pitchers, from an urn, to a tough, water-well. No very inviting by-ways, after all, was this village well.

"Is this well your only one?" inquired of a neighbor.

"Dry! Yes, sir'ree, very often in hot weather."

"And where in such case, do you go for water?"

"To the spring, a little way out of the village."

"And if the spring fails, what do you do then?"

"Why, we go to the well higher up—the best water of all."

"And what if that runs dry?"

"Why, ma'am, what do we drink up—cause. It is always the same in winter and summer."

I want to see this precious well that never dries up. It was a clear, sparkling rivulet, coming down from the high hills, and with several leaps and runs, but with the steady flow and manner of fullness and freedom. It flowed down to the highway side. It was within reach of every child's little pitcher. It was enough for every thirsty beast. The small birds came down thither to drink.—The oxen and lambs knew how to thread down a little path to its brink. The thirsty beasts of burden, along the dusty road, as I could see by their tracks, knew the way to the well that never dries up.

It reminded me of the waters of life and salvation, flowing from the "depth of Ages," and brought within the reach of all men by the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every other brook may go dry in the days of drought and adversity; but this heavenly spring never ceases to flow.

Without waiting until earth's exquisite brooks shall fail, let us all hasten at once, with hearts submit to the heavenly well which never dries up.

An Englishwoman Scaling the Jungfrau.

A PERILOUS BUT SUCCESSFUL ADVENTURE.

The following account of a perilous ascent of the Jungfrau by an Englishwoman is given in a correspondence of the London Times:—

"Last Thursday Mrs. Wiskworth, accompanied by her husband, a friend and three guides of the Eigerwallhorn, started from the hotel de la Jungfrau, to sleep at the Wengern, where there is a cave with two separate recesses, in some of the large rocks which overhang the great Aletsch glacier. This trysting place we reached at five o'clock the same day, and left again by candle light at 1:25 the following morning. I may here mention a very simple expedient adopted by the guides in lieu of lanterns. Having knocked the bottom out of their ordinary wine bottles, they inserted a candle into each one, fixing them into the necks of the bottles; by this means the flame of a candle may be effectually protected against the wind. We were safely piloted by lanes over the crevices and rocks to the which lay in our way for about an hour after starting. The ascent of the Aletsch glacier is very gradual and somewhat tedious for a considerable distance above Faulberg, but as the snow was generally in a very good state, we were enabled to reach the top of the steepest slope leading to the Col du Rothstrat at about 5 50. Here we breakfasted and deposited our impedimenta in the shape of remaining provisions, &c., upon the snow, in order to have our guides as unincumbered as possible for the latter part of the ascent.

"At 7 10 we commenced to climb the last ice slope, which, although not yet entirely denuded of snow, is rapidly becoming so, and render the passage of it more difficult and dangerous. The step-cutting was excellent, Beans and Kits being generally in advance. The last slope culminates in a short and very narrow ridge of soft snow, which until trampled down, had little more than the breadth of the human foot. Along this crest Mrs. Wiskworth walked upright, with the assistance of the guides. The rest of us did the same in turn. The little black flag was still gallantly holding its own at the summit. That it could continue to do so long, however, appeared to us very doubtful. On comparing our watches we found our ascent had taken us seven hours and a half, including thirty-five minutes occupied in breakfasting—not bad walking for a lady.

"But the summit of the Jungfrau is by no means a resting-place; we, after the minutes spent there we again repack, and, with Fritz in advance and Baum behind, the latter ever on the qui vive as to our movements, and exclaiming from time to time 'Alles ist ganz gut,' we effected our descent to the bottom of the slope in about an hour and a quarter. Notwithstanding the difficulty and danger of this part of the day's work Mrs. Wiskworth, who, as I understand, had slightly sprained her knee two days before on the Aletschhorn, descended hardly more assistance from the guides than many men, as little accustomed to ice-work as herself, might have been excused for doing."

MINISTRY.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

The present position in our country's history is a peculiar one; and one well worthy of the study of the patriotic and well thinking.

Party lines, once strongly marked and in full relief, have, for years past, faded before our eyes, and now they are almost obliterated. From the elements disengaged and set free by the gradual destruction of old parties, new political combinations have been formed. In fact, the parties that now occupy the political arena are altogether different in constitution and aims from those that were potential and wide spread a few years ago. These changes are the result of particular circumstances, and the greatly changed wants and demands of the times. What some twenty or thirty years ago would have suited the genius or the exigencies of the country, would now be altogether unfitted or inadequate. This, reason teaches and experience confirms. Hence the singular political combinations that have taken place during the last decade. At first viewed with disfavour, they have been soon found to be essential to a healthy development and a proper conservation of those interests in which a people are most deeply concerned, and which they prize most highly. And at present, we find that the Government which, in the inscrutable wisdom of an all-wise and all-superintending Providence, has been called to the management of affairs, embraces in itself elements which, although they might, under similar circumstances, be somewhat antagonistic in their nature to each other, the lofty aspiration of patriotism trampling under foot all minor and selfish considerations, and an anxious desire for the public weal, triumphing over personal and party differences, have united and combined, in a manner, that augurs more than a fair realization of all reasonable anticipations of the future. But in such circumstances, too much ought not to be expected. People are apt to indulge their hopes and expectations to a degree, almost chimerical. The slightest reflection is sufficient to show, with such mental proclivities, how easily, and how, not unfrequently, without fair cause, disatisfaction may arise. Hardly ever does the reality come up to men's expectations. It is an old saying, that distance (or futurity) lends enchantment to the view. This is no less true in politics than in other instances. Most individuals have, at best, but very vague ideas and views of the power and difficulties of an Administration, and are apt to imagine that it is omnipotent—that it has only to say the word, and a thing is done. This, every one, in the least acquainted with the constitution and nature of a popular Government, knows to be absurd and preposterous in the extreme. A government's tenure of power in country like ours, is ever uncertain and precarious. Only so long as it can give satisfaction to a majority of the people—the views of this majority being supposed to be represented by the majority in Parliament—can it retain its position at the head of affairs, and wield the authority vested in it. It will be seen, therefore, at once, how careful the policy it must adopt and follow, and how circumspect the course it must pursue. Interests and considerations which the outside world know nothing of, have to be carefully weighed, and conclusions often come to, which, on account of this ignorance, are viewed with disfavor, if not strongly denounced, while a correct knowledge of the reasons that led to them, would induce a different state of feeling with those who are honest and candid enough to judge measures by their merits." For instance, local interests exercise a powerful influence over individuals. Many, indeed, would subordinate all interests—however important in themselves, or with whatever better claims than their own—to certain local considerations in which they may be interested. This is not right; it is altogether incompatible with the maxims of all sound constitutional policy. It should be a country first, locality second; and not locality before country. This doctrine, indeed, is too often, no doubt, practically ignored, even by those who make the loudest professions of "love of country &c"; but it is, nevertheless, the doctrine which should be acknowledged, and universally, and adhered to by statesmen—the very instrument being used in the legitimate and highest sense of the word. This very thing will show some of the difficulties that beset a Government whose honesty and fidelity to administer affairs on that principle of political economy—that Bentham so strongly insisted upon viz that the greatest good may accrue to the greatest number of persons, with the least possible evil." It can hardly be supposed that the Government having to legislate for the whole country, can, in all instances, identify itself with all the local interests and schemes that are urged upon its notice, or pledge itself to give the old "old country hesitation," without proper investigation and deliberation—even when its own followers are the advocates. They have got to look into the feasibility of such things, and weigh the greatest advantages likely to be derivable therefrom, with the probable expenditure. This takes time. Those concerned, however, can see no reason for the delay; they become dissatisfied, and may go to the length, even, of joining the [illegible] of the Government, and [illegible] to the country prosperous. Remember this ye slow coach selfish and timid ones.

THE WAR.

It is reported on what may be considered good authority, that Gen. Lee's army has been weakened by sending reinforcements to Johnston, in Georgia, and that the main body has, in consequence, fallen back in the direction of Richmond, closely pursued by the Federal cavalry.

Fort Moultrie is said to have surrendered to the Federals, and now there is nothing to hinder the monitors from advancing within fighting distance of the city. Gen. Gillmore is reported to have asked the Washington authorities whether he would be justified in shelling the city, and has been told to fire away.

The Union School Pic-nic, came off on Friday last. The morning was dark and lowering, but the afternoon was more propitious. The Pic-nic was held in the woods near the stone Quarries. There must have been about 600 present—great and small. All seemed to enjoy themselves very much. An abundance of good things in the shape of "eatables" was on hand. More no doubt would have been present, if the day had been finer. We believe all however, had a good time of it.

FIRE.—The Barns of Mr. John Mills, 7th Concession of Smith, were burned on Saturday the 5th inst.; the barn contained all the crops except a few acres of oats. Mr. Mills will feel his loss very much as this is the third time he has been burned out within ten years. The fire originated about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, it is supposed by some of his nearest neighbors who done the rascally act. There was no insurance.

Affairs at the Capital.

[QUEBEC CORRESPONDENCE.]

QUEBEC, Sept. 12th, 1863.

Our week has passed away [illegible] cannot say, that it has been [illegible] profitably, yet little has been done in perfecting and passing [illegible] questions before the Country.

On Tuesday last, the estimates for the current year were laid before House, showing a deficit of nearly four millions. It must be borne in mind however, that a large item of this is for the redemption of the public debt—$600,000 for Militia, and [illegible] Government have taken stock. Public expenses have doubled—it is difficult therefore to see how we are to bring both ends to meet, without resorting to borrowing. Mr. HOSTON perhaps may be able to tell us in his financial statement to be given on Tuesday next, how this is to be accomplished.

Nearly two days of this week have been spent upon Mr. Brown's motion for a committee to enquire whether the Parliament Buildings could be ready for the Session of 1865, or in other words—whether the statement of the Ministry that they would be ready or not. Had this motion come from the Opposition, it could have been understood, but coming from one of their professed supporters, it was difficult to understand, and could only have been made to soothe the indignation of the Electors of Toronto, toward their present Representatives, for having deliberately deceived them, as to the intentions of the Government respecting the removal to that City. The member for South Oxford was evidently much mortified at the loss of his motion, as it proved most incontestibly his loss of control over the members of the House.

Yesterday, the Premier obtained a second reading for his Militia Bill. The measure, though an improvement upon the one of last Session, is full of defects, and will be largely amended in committee. The Opposition were in a good humor and promised their assistance in carrying the measure with such amendments as the House might agree upon.

In my next, I hope to be able to announce to your readers, the passing of such a Bill as shall in its details show that the defences of the Country is not a matter to be trifled with, and the maintenance of the connection between this and the Mother Country not to be made a matter of dollars and cents.

THE BURLEIGH ROAD.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—As some of your readers may never have heard of the Burleigh Colonization Road, and others may have only a vague idea of it, I ask the privilege of an insertion for the following hasty written description of the Road, settlement, prospects of the country, &c.

The Burleigh Road commences at the south end of Lot 39, in the 14th Concession of Smith, about 8 miles above Young's Mills, and in view of that beautiful sheet of water known as "Clear Lake," running in a North East direction till it strikes the River Otonabee, which it crosses on three bridges—two are frame and one substantially built, the other a log construction. The road then runs nearly east for a few miles, so as to escape Cedar Lakes, and also to pass east of Long Lake, and then keeps along the valley of Eel's Creek from the eighth mile to the twelfth. Along the first three miles in Smith, the land is all in private hands, and is stoney; about half a mile this side of the bridge what is known as the "Burleigh Rocks" commence and extend along the road about three miles; this section is nothing but granite rock, with here and there a dwarf pine or oak, and in some places Briars. After passing this you come to very nice looking land, which extends for six or seven miles; this land is all or nearly all in private hands, and although very stoney is covered with a growth of very heavy timber. This land, although not as good as land in Anstruther, Chandos, &c., is held by the owners at from $3 to $6 per acre; there is, I believe, about 8,000 acres of it. There are a few settlers along the road here, and between the road and Stoney Lake; their crops this year look well and they appear satisfied with the quality of their land. After getting through this hardwood land, you come to the great pine belt; but as the road does not cross it at right angles persons imagine it is wider than it really is in this; here the road runs through it for about eight miles. In spots here and there along the road you will see pieces of very nice hardwood land, but I do not know the extent of them; several of them have been taken up by settlers, who have cleared and built upon them, and the crops look very well this year. After passing through this pine belt or district, the land becomes better; judging from the timber, &c., it is now all or nearly all hardwood; immense maples, bloomwood, beech, red elm, birch, and ironwood, with hemlock, cedar, and a few large pines thrown in as it were for variety sake. The soil now begins to get deep, and the best settlement commences, extending for a distance of ten or twelve miles north and south, and three or four east and west of the road. The road crosses Eels Creek three times—first on the ninth mile from Burleigh Bridge, then at the eleventh, and lastly on the twelfth.

On the fifteenth mile a gentleman lately from England (Mr. Gambors) with ample means, has settled, there being a good mill privilege on the Creek at this point; he has cleared about twelve acres, has built a good sized log house, and been at great part of the purchasing for a Saw Mill on the ground, but has not been able so far to get any mills to the land, although having repeatedly offered to pay the money down to Government for 1000 acres. This has been a great delay to the settlement, as a Saw Mill is very much needed by the settlers. The road at the end of the Government clearing refuses to pass the land into the market but keeps it private property, although it has been kept hundreds of families settlers from going in.

The road along the 18, 19 and 20th miles runs nearly east, on the 20th mile the last bridge over Eels Creek occurs. At the left of the bridge (going east) is situated one of a quarter to half a mile, Mr. Chas. A. Vizard is about erecting a Saw Mill on one of the New Free Grants given by Government; this mile is an excellent one and the situation all that could be desired; most there are in the commencement of both settlements, and no other privilege exists in your pet of ten about fifteen miles. Mr. Vizard has also laid out, along the road through his Lot, a number of Village Lots—and from the bridge up through Messrs. Hall's, Wilson's, Nichol's and Vizard's Lots the first Village of the Burleigh Colonization Road will certainly be built; it is centrally [illegible]

[illegible] gentlemanly style and obliging disposition as a favorite on the road, and certainly deserves the patronage of that portion of the travelling public, who travel in this direction. Mr. Hall's shanty is forty miles from Peterborough.

You are now (or at least you would be were you there) [illegible] the bridge over Eels Creek [illegible] the head of the north bay of Jack's Lake, distant three miles by a "Portage," but so very bad that I would not advise any [illegible] to attempt it. The land is very bad along here to the head of Jack's Lake; but the bad land is of no great width, as a mile or two to the right or left of the road you come into fine hardwood timber land. To the west and north of Mr. Hall's the land is good—quite to the settlement. At two miles from Mr. H's you come to the Loon Lake Portage (the highest, distant from Rice Lake one mile and a quarter), although very good land walk covered with hardwood. Loon Lake is in the Township of Chandos; it is really a beautiful sheet of water, the banks are covered down to the water with hardwood—[illegible] a gentleman do are here about the shores of this large lake; it is about seven miles long from east to west, with a breadth of from one-eighth to one and a half miles, and the road runs nearly north and south, about four and a half miles—being its average width of one mile.

To the south of Loon Lake, all the way to Pauduh Lake, a distance of about six miles, the land cannot be beat; it is free from stone and swamp, with very few others, and is [illegible] in timber, &c., in fact resembles that Township twenty years ago. This tract of country is of considerable extent, running into and almost across the Township of Carlill. It also extends from Eels Creek (which is three or four miles west of the road) down to the Township of Wollecoton, which is in rear of the Township of Lake, in which such valuable deposits of almost pure Copper and Lead have been discovered. These [illegible] an air line, are not more than twelve to thirteen miles from the road, and over half of that distance a fine water communication (Loon Lake) exists. A portion of the trade about the mines and [illegible] the judicious management of our public men, to be brought to Peterborough.

To the east of Loon Lake, towards the Townships of Wollecoton and Lake, already mentioned, the land is rocky and light, being quite level and covered with fine stunty hardwood, scarcely a pine visible. There would be very little difficulty in building a road from the Lake to the [illegible] To the south of Loon Lake, all the way to Jack's Lake, is very fine land, well fit for settlement, and will at no very distant day be a healthy well-to-do settlement.

Coming back to Loon Lake Portage, the road goes [illegible] south east, till it strikes the boundary line between Anstruther and Chandos, which it follows, with slight deviations, for about five miles, when it again runs north-east to avoid Eels Lake, the head waters of Eels Creek.

East of the thirty-three mile post, and at the head of Pauduh Lake, a little settlement is now going on. Messrs. Wheeler Armstrong, Joseph Dunlop, Nicholson, Collins, and others, having taken land, put dwellings up, and made considerable clearings. This land, as I said before, is first-rate here, and for miles in several every direction. Mr. Wm. Armstrong has a very fine mill privilege on hand, and will next summer (if the Government place the land in the market) make arrangements to build. This is the only mill privilege between Pauduh Lake and Vizard's, and the only one yet known to exist in a circuit of ten miles. Mr. Armstrong intends next summer laying out a Village on his property. This is a good place for a Village, if the Government could be induced to open a road from Bobcageon Road, running to the Hastings Road. This section of country seems better suited for it than any other; it is nearly half way between Peterson's Line and Burleigh Bridge, and would be about fifty to fifty-five miles from Peterboro. [illegible] about [illegible] west, and by that means would settle it up quicker, and would also afford the settlers a ready way Peterboro', which sooner or later must be the principle market, for the settlers on the Bobcageon and Northern part of the Hastings Roads, as well as the Burleigh Road.

I am aware that some of our public men are not in favor of building Colonization roads on account of the cost of them; this is a mistaken idea. Colonization Roads, if properly built and the land adjoining them rightly managed, do not in reality cost the country one cent, but, on the contrary, are a source of profit to it.

The County of Victoria contains of the lands lately opened by Colonization Roads (and which would have been still a wilderness only for the roads) a population of about one thousand souls, being [illegible] population of about four thousand. This is a direct increase to the population of the County—a direct increase to the revenue of the County, and a direct increase to the [illegible] and business men of the County.

The same thing can be done for the County of Peterborough; the lands are as good, if not better; they are certainly freer from stone and pine; the class of settlers already gone in are as good, have made as much improvement in the time, and are able and willing to make more. All that is wanting is for the Government to open [illegible] in the several Townships surveyed, and the proceeds of the land sales for one year will repay the Government every cent of money expended or to be expended in building the road to Peterson's Line. The settlers will have to bear their share of the taxes of the country, and will add to the trade of Peterborough and the county generally.

And said of one or two settlers' crops before. It may say of all the crops on the road; they are good wherever they were got in in time; they consisted of Potatoes, Turnips, Oats, Corn and Spring Wheat; the Potatoes and Turnips are very fine crops, the former as ever I saw; grown on our old [illegible] exhibition [illegible] clean and [illegible] the [illegible] and the [illegible] are making an appearance to shoot larger fallows the coming winter.

[illegible] to one hundred and fifty settlers on the road, and the principal agencies are from 1000 to 1500 acres. When we consider that one year ago last July, there were only six families from Burleigh Bridge, 18, the twenty-three mile post, (the [illegible] to which the road is made) you must admit also others consider the land fit for settlement, when they have gone in and made the improvements they have, without being able to get a title to their lands, although every single one of them would willingly pay for his farm—a great [illegible] of them in fact. As I said above [illegible] and I have to [illegible] the Government to carry on the road, to give them the means to get out and in conveniently.

As my letter is now a great deal longer than I intended when beginning it, I will close by asking you to bring the matter before the Government and the country, through the [illegible] your widely [illegible] journal, hoping that the Government may see the necessity of at once going on with the construction of the Burleigh Road, and opening up the lands already surveyed for sale.

I am, dear sir, yours, &c.,

TRAVELLER.

Peterboro', Sept. 14, 1863.

[illegible]

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—Perceiving that the columns of your respectable journal are open to communications from [illegible] I confidently expect that you do me the favor to give this a place in your next issue. The subject is unimportant, and the steps imputed to me are trifling in the extreme, occurrence. Nothing less than the abduction of a young woman, aged about 18 or 19 years, for daring to exercise her own judgment in choosing a religion. The name of the persecuted girl is Hannah Officer, who, at their demise, left her mother one of a family of [illegible] others and sisters in very [illegible] to care for themselves, and then to assist in supporting two or three more of the family, too young to earn their support. Hannah lived with me through the winter of 1860, and during that time did not go to Mass in Dublin more than two or three times; though I never interfered in the slightest degree with her religious opinions, nor did any of my family to my knowledge. In the Spring of 1861, her sister Margaret who had great power over her, prevailed on her (I believe contrary to her wish, and certainly to the annoyance of my family, for Hannah is a sweet tempered girl,) to go to the States. When the sisters arrived in Rochester, they separated, Hannah commenced living with a religious minister (of what denomination I cannot say) and remained with him for nearly a year, and, undoubtedly it was there she first imbibed [illegible] contrary to the religion that was brought up to. Her sister, Margaret, suspecting her fickle the infallible Church to be wavering, again exercised her influence over her and brought her back to Catholic. Ever since her return she never attended any of the duties of the Catholic religion, but went to Protestant meetings whenever she had opportunity. She commenced to live me again in October last, where she remains up to the present time—altogether neglecting the duties required by the Catholic Church, to the great annoyance of her friends, who importuned her, first mildly, to return to her ancient faith. Finding this unavailing, they commenced another course, threatening to force her before the Priest, who, they said, would use harsh means, in order to bring her to obedience to his mandates. Seeing she remained steadfast and proof against [illegible] they turned batteries to bring about her purpose, they formed the resolution to force her away, in order to bring her under their influence, which they accomplished on Sunday night last, in a low and wily manner: by [illegible] four or five [illegible] of hers, to [illegible] quarterly, a friendly visit [illegible] on Sunday evening, who, when going home prevailed on Hannah to accompany them to the Concession Road, distant [illegible] my house about 200 yards. When they got her there, three or four ruffians turned through the fence, following her through my field towards the house, and dragged her from my daughter [illegible] and [illegible] Road, where another gang was in waiting, who assisted in bringing her away. Where she is now secreted I cannot tell—of course, somewhere in honorable Doute (?)—one thing is certain, which is, that she is in bondage, otherwise she would make her escape.

It will not be my fault if this violent breach of the laws and attempt to [illegible] a subject of the [illegible] Queen [illegible] of all [illegible] beings to think and act for themselves in matters which concern their everlasting welfare. The lawless parties are well known, and can be identified.

I am aware that in giving the above statements I am incurring grave responsibilities. I also know I will have to encounter the displeasure of many; perhaps too, it may endanger my personal safety; yet, knowing it to be incontrovertable, and [illegible] with [illegible] that is justly due to the public, I stand fearless of consequences.

Yours [illegible]

W. SIMPSON.

August 25, 1863.

P. S.—The publication of the above has been postponed by my direction till this week, because the ill-treated girl was allowed to return to my place (on her promise to go back again) for her clothing, where she now, voluntarily remains. Nor would it now, nor at any future time, appear before the public, other friends had not tried to damage her character, by saying it was in [illegible] she remained with me—which is [illegible] pretext to try to excuse a violent [illegible] an infamous and unfounded attempt to tarnish an unsullied name. Never since she came to my house did I hear her utter a word or do an act unbecoming a modest, prudent and virtuous girl.

If it was not her change of religion that [illegible] her, before the Priest of Dounc, whose influence (since exercising this wile) to bring her back to her fold, proved unavailing.

The Hon. Mr. Foley.

We clip the following extract from the Quebec correspondence of the Ottawa [illegible]

[illegible] himself of the Hon. Mr. Hedges—of which [illegible] actually—it is to be determined him finally to give up the faction to which he has been leading the last [illegible] Yesterday and to-day he has been in constant communication with his former friends. The arrangements [illegible] at the house to dine at the same table as the hon. gentlemen, in a confidential [illegible] of ministerial members of the Upper and Lower House. The utmost [illegible] good will prevailed, and it seemed to me that the hon. [illegible] strengthened in his determination to give up his suicidal policy, and to formulate his [illegible] compromise."

Marshal Forey to the French Minister of War.

[illegible] following [illegible] Spanish [illegible] Minister [illegible] to-day [illegible] to their [illegible] to a distance, I found it necessary first to purge the environs of the capital of the bands which I may say were blockading it. On the other hand Negrette, seconded by Arrellano, Carbajal, and others, were organizing considerable forces at Tlascala to operate in the State of Puebla, and to interrupt our communications. The occupation of that town then became indispensable. I have consequently accepted measures to provide for all these demands. A French column, under the orders of Colonel [illegible] Lorencez, is marching on Tlascala and Mexican detachment, commanded by Gen. Gutierrez, which will hold the position of Apam. The troops of General Vicario occupy Tulancingo and Tulancingo. The troops of Gen. Noriega are posted at Tepeaca. General Marquez, the present [illegible] in Queretaro, or shall be able to proceed to that town with sufficient forces. Another division will shortly take possession of Puebla. Its line, thus established and stationed in the neighborhood of Mexico, where it will be better supplied with provisions, and will [illegible] Any these measures I consider a [illegible] [illegible] Mexico, and I maintain they [illegible] tication with Puebla. Neither have I neglected the occupation of the coast. The question of the customs of Alvarado is a very [illegible] [illegible] and to [illegible] the receipts are estimated at 50,000 piastres a month, of which one half is to be paid into the treasury and the other half is to be employed in paying customs guardians as well as the custom-house officers and police. I have authorized, at the suggestion of M. Saligny, duration of the customs, a guard auxiliary force, to assume the rôle of customs-guardians of Whitethan. General Jesus Ortega has raised the province of Oaxaca in our favor. General Maria has organized an expedition to Carmen for Tabasco. He has taken possession of some places on the coast, and he can co-operate with the Alvarez-guerillas of Minatitlan. We shall shortly succeed in [illegible] the entire coast from Vera Cruz to Yucatan. A troop to occupy Tampico with a French force which General Mejia will support with the Indian corps, under the command of General Moreno, who is on that spot. The General commanding the artillery has found in the works erected round Mexico ninety-seven pieces of cannon, of which the greater number are of large calibre, 986,000 cartridges, 22,196 shells, 3,420 prepared for cannon, 12,300 kilogrammes of gunpowder, 900,000 capsules, and [illegible] of varieties sizes. A detailed account has been forwarded to your excellency.

FOREY.

Increasing Strength of the Ministry.

The Quebec correspondent of the Montreal Transcript writes as follows:

With respect to the state of parties in the House, I can only say that the statement I made in my letter to you on Monday last has turned out correct. I predicted that the seceding ex-Ministers could not withhold their support from the general policy of the Ministry; that the moderate members from Lower Canada could not persist much longer in an unreasoning opposition to the Upper Canada Majority, "as such;" and that the Ottawa case must now see the necessity of not continuing to sacrifice the interests of their constituents to their own petty ends, and their desire—because [illegible] to get their friends, [illegible] in power once more.

Things are happening exactly as I said. The Ministry are daily getting [illegible] of support of the members who have hitherto opposed them, and others will soon follow. There is wailing and lamentation and woe in the Opposition tents. Rachel is weeping for her children, and will not be comforted. [illegible] never [illegible] A [illegible] perpetrated a joke, good or bad, since the Scottie back-sliding [illegible] their fellows look like so many mutes at a funeral. The first question asked when two of them meet, is —"any more gone?" Unrest [illegible] pervades the ranks of the party which is [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Poetry.

THAT CURL OF GOLDEN HAIR.

It waved upon my mother's brow,
Long happy years ago,
Before stern sorrow came and changed
Those sunny tho'ts to snow.
And many by her thou monarchs crowns
Or glittering gems so rare,
In that bright treasured tress to me,
That tress of golden hair.

Our home was 'neath a cottage roof,
In Scotland, far away;
And there a haughty lady found
Me at the door at play.
She asked my mother, might I go
With her to be a playmate;
My mother wept, but gave to me
That curl of golden hair.

And I have kept it through long years.
Where e'er my feet might roam,
The dearest thing, it seems to me,
Within that my city home.
And 'mid the, littering throng of wealth,
Beneath the gas-light's glare,
Its ever been my talisman,
That curl of golden hair.

They say my mother's lying now,
With folded hands, at rest,
The green leaves whispering o'er her grave,
Blue violets on her breast.
That I can never see h r more,
Repay her for her care;
'Tis all that's left me now to love,
That curl of golden hair.

And still I'll love its shining waves,
When youth's bright dream is past,
When age has furrowed o'er my brow,
And shadows 'round me cast.
And when from earth I pass away,
My mother's home to share,
O! let on my bosom rest,
That curl of golden hair

Miscellaneous.

GOD HELP THE POOR.

BY S. T. ARTHUR.

'What a terrible night!' exclaimed Mrs. Creighton, as she drew aside the heavy damask curtains, and looked out.

The snow had been falling for several hours, and the air was yet filled by myriads of flakes, that whirled in wild eddies through the narrow streets, or came in rattling gusts against the windows. Great drifts were piling up steadily against doorways, and on the lee of corner houses, and in all places where some barrier turned the strong wind aside in its onward march. From a high, piping treble, down to the lowest muttering base, the tempest voice ran up and down the scale; now in tones and half tones; now in chords; and now in shuddering dissonance.

Mr. Creighton came and stood by the side of his wife, at the window of their luxurious home, and looked out upon the stormy night.

'I pity those who are compelled to go abroad!' he said.

'And those who have no homes,' added his wife.

'And the poor, who have no fire in their dwellings.'

'No fire; and on such a night as this!' Mrs. Creighton turned and looked into her husband's face, with an expression of doubt, fear and pity. 'Surely none are in this extremity!'

'Hundreds, I fear, even in our Christian city,' replied her husband, as he moved from the window, and sat down in front of the gate. 'Hundreds,' he added in a thoughtful, concerned way. 'With everything around us so warm, comfortable, and luxurious, it is difficult to realize the fact, that many, very many, are now cold and hungry. Poor, sick women, and tender children, crouching in fireless rooms, or by hearths on which the last red embers are dying.'

'Don't husband, don't!' exclaimed Mrs. Creighton, lifting her arms and turning her face away. "I shudder at the bare imagination of such things.'

'If we shudder at the imagination of such doings, what must it be to suffer the reality,' said Mrs. Creighton, not even making an effort to push the subject from his thoughts.

'God help the poor!' ejaculated his wife, in a tone of pity.

'Yes, God help them!' was the low earnest response.

There followed a silence of some moments, when Mr. Creighton said:

'When did you see Mrs. Bayle?'

'Not since last week.'

'How was she, then?'

'She looked pale and weak. I gave her some tea and a loaf of fresh bread.

'And you haven't seen her since?'

'No.'

'When was it we sent her that half ton of coal?'

'I can't remember. But now I think of it, Hannah told me, day before yesterday, that Mrs. Bayle came round, when I was out, and asked for a bucket of coal.'

'Did she get it?'

'Yes. Hannah gave it to her.'

'That was two days ago?'

'Yes.'

Mr. Creighton sighed, and sat looking into the grate for nearly a minute, without speaking.

'I feel troubled about the woman and her little children,' he said, at last. "Just think, if they should be without food or fire, on a night like this.'

'Oh, that can't be!' answered his wife.

'It is possible, Allie. Such things have been. Women and children have perished with cold, even in our city.'

'Don't talk about it. You give me the heartache.'

Mr. Creighton arose, and commenced walking the floor in a disturbed manner.

'I declare, Edward,' said his wife, 'you have destroyed all our home comfort for the evening by those dreadful images your fancy has created. Let us be thankful for the good we have, and show our thankfulness in its enjoyment.'

Mr. Creighton did not answer, but kept on his movement, back and forward, across the room. He was thinking of poor Mrs. Bayle.

'We must finish "A Tale of two Cities" to-night,' said his wife, taking up a volume. 'It leaves Edward, and I will read. We are at the morning of the Bastile.'

But Mr. Creighton did not pause in his restless walk. The reading began, and was continued for two or fifteen minutes.

'What a wild, fearful picture!' said Mrs. Creighton, letting the volume fall into her lap. 'Such word-painting power is wonderful.'

She looked up at her husband, and saw, at a glance, that he had not been listening.

'I don't believe,' she said, in a slightly pettish tone, 'that you've heard a single page that I have been reading.'

'To tell the truth, Allie, I don't think I have,' was frankly answered.

'Not very complimentary to me or the author.'

'On the contrary, Allie, I acknowledge my interest in both. But just now I can think of nothing else but Mrs. Bayle and her children.'

'We cannot help them to-night, Edward. The storm is too wild for any one to go abroad. Leave them in the hands of God. He will take care of them.'

'How will he take care of them.'

Mr. Creighton stood still, and looked steadily into his wife's face. Her eyes fell beneath his glance of earnest interrogation.

'How will God take care of them, Allie, if they are without food and fuel to-night?' She did not answer, and he added—

'Not by sending coal and bread through supernatural agencies, but by putting it into the heart of some human being to go to their succor. When you said, 'God help the poor!' the thought of Mrs. Bayle and her children came in tantly into my mind, and I cannot put it away. I must see to them this night.'

'Oh, no, no, Edward! You cannot go out in such a dreadful storm.'

As if to give force to her words, the tempest shrieked wildly, and the fast-falling snow drove its fine crystals rattling against the windows. Mr. Creighton pushed aside the curtain and looked out. The whi ling flanks filled the air like a cloud. He could hardly see across the street.

'You mustn't think of going out, Edward,' said his wife, as she came to his side, and drew her arms around him.

'Allie, you said, just now, 'God help the poor!' and spoke from genuine pity.—He cannot help them, except by human hands. I feel, so strongly, that my hands are needed for help to-night, that I could not hold back were the storm twice as violent. I have warm garments to protect me from the cold. I have health, strength, and a stout heart in humanity's cause, I trust. Allie, I must go. No sleep could weigh down my eye-lids to-night, if I remained in uncertainty about this poor woman and her children.'

And resolutely putting aside all remonstrances, Mr. Creighton prepared himself to go out. On passing into the street, the gust swept fiercely into his face, taking his breath for a moment, and staggering him back several paces. But, recovering himself, he leaned a little forward, bracing to the wind, and plunged away through snow-drifts that half buried him at times. The small tenement in which Mrs. Bayle lived stood several squares distant, in a narrow court.—Thither he made his way, as rapidly as he could more through all the manifold obstructions that retarded his progress. He found the court almost blockaded up with snow, which the wind had swept from the roofs above, and piled up in the narrow space between the houses. On gaining the one in which Mrs. Bayle lived, he saw no lights in the windows, though the shutters were open. He put his hand on the door and pushed it open. All was silent within. He spoke, but no voice answered, and there came no sound to his ears. Then going out quickly, he shut the door, and crossing the court, knocked where a light gleamed out from a window.

'Who's there?' It was a woman's voice that called.

He knocked again.

'Come in,' said the same voice.

Mr. Creighton pushed open the door, and entered a small room, in which a woman sat sewing. She was alone.

'Excuse my intrusion,' he said, noticing that his appearance surprised and started her. 'But I want to ask about a Mrs. Bayle who lives in this court. Have you seen her to-day?'

'No, sir; I don't think I've seen her around to-day,' answered the woman.

'She lives nearly opposite?'

'Yes, sir.'

'It's all dark there, said Mr. Creighton. 'I opened the door and spoke, but no one answered.'

'I hope she isn't sick or dead,' remarked the woman, with some concern of manner. 'I don't know what would become of her four little children.'

'We must look after them,' said Mr. Creighton, in a decided way. 'Will you let me have a candle and some matches?'

'Yes, sir.' And the woman laid down her work.

'And go over with me?'

'Yes, sir.' Then she went to the stairs, and called, 'Jake, come down here! A gentleman's called to see about Mrs. Bayle, and I'm going over there with him.'

The rough voice of a man answered to this summons, and some heavy feet were heard moving on the floor above. Before their owner made his appearance, however, Mr. Creighton and the woman were across the court.

On lighting a candle in the chilly room, which they had entered, they saw only a table, two old chairs, and the black, broken stove on the hearth.

'Mrs. Bayle!' called the woman, going to the stairs that led to the single room above. But no answer came.

'We must go up,' said Mr. Creighton. And they passed to the chamber.

'Save us!' exclaimed his companion, as she held up the wavering candle. 'They're all here!'

As she spoke, the light fell upon a woman's white, deathly face. She was lying on a bed with such scanty covering that the chill air could scarcely have failed to reach her victim. The arms, but not the faces of three children were seen also.

'Mrs. Bayle!' This time the small reached his senses, and the opened his eyes, that were glassy, as the light.

'Are you sick, Mrs. Bayle?'

'Yes,' was the faint answer.

The children, half awake from cold, commenced up their heads from beneath the covering, and one of them said, seriously:

'Aint we going to have any supper to-night, mother?'

A groan only came up, at this, from the [illegible] heart of Mr. Creighton.

'Yes, you shall have your supper to-night,' answered the woman. 'Lie still and keep warm for a little while.'

'I can't keep warm,' answered the child, 'O dear!' it's so cold.'

Setting down the candle, the woman said —'I'll run over and get it comfortable, and John shall bring a bucket of coal and make a fire in the stove downstairs, that will soon warm the house.' And she hurried away. In a few moments she was back again with a thick covering for the bed, which she laid over the woman and her children, and as her briskly moving hands tucked in the warm comfortable all around, she said:

'Now lie still until we get a fire made, and your supper ready.'

'God help the poor!' said Mr. Creighton, with tear-filled eyes, as he went down stairs. The woman heard him, for in his emotion he had spoken aloud, and she answered:

'A great many people say that, sir; and yet no help comes. It doesn't put bread into children's mouths. It doesn't feed the hungry and clothe the naked, sir.'

'But God may inspire willingness in human hearts,' replied Mr. Creighton, 'as he has done to-night, and thus help them. And but for this willingness which he gives, no help would come. So, I say still, God help the poor!'

'He must have put it into your heart,' said the woman; 'for if you hadn't come these poor souls might have perished before daylight.'

'Perhaps,' answered Mr. Creighton, as he took out his purse. 'Then adding:—'Here is money for Mrs. Bayle. Will you see that she has everything needed to-night?'

'I will sir, as if she was my own sister,' replied the woman with an earnestness of tone that left Mr. Creighton in no doubt.

'And so, God help the poor!' said he as he passed out again into the stormy night and took his way homeward.

'Oh Edward,' exclaimed Mrs. Creighton as after more than half an hour of anxious suspense her husband came in with a quick step, bright eye and ruddy countenance. 'I'm so glad you are home again! It has stormed harder than ever since you left. How did you find Mrs Bayle?'

'Without food, fire, or light!' he answered. 'I think death would have found her and her children, maybap, if God had not sent me to their relief. It is God who really helps the poor, Allie. We are only the instruments in his hands. May we always be willing!'

'As you have been to-night,' said Mrs. Creighton, with a new impression of her husband's character, in her heart. And she laid her hand in his, and looked lovingly into a face that was all alive with manly feeling.

Ancient Telegraphing.

The communication of intelligence by the electric telegraph now came into use at the East, recalls an interesting circumstance of ancient history. Compare it with the mode employed lately in sending news to Constantinople from Ephesus, that the railways was completed to the latter place from Smyrna. The ancient message was despatched over the same route. "When Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, was prosecuting her pious researches in Jerusalem she caused a series of towers to be built along the roadcast from Tyre to Constantinople, and when she had effected what she and the Christians of the fourth century regarded as her great discovery, the uncovering of the beams of wood in a pit near Calvary, which she believed, for some reason which we may well doubt to be the wood of the cross of Christ, she 'telegraphed' the account of the discovery to her son in Byzantium. A fire blazing on the hill of Acre sent the intelligence to the hill at Ramah, the city of Samuel, and thence it flew to the hill of Samaria, where the city of Omri was then splendid in its Roman decorations. They saw it from far-off Carmel, and lit their fires to tell the news of those who watched on the spur of Lebanon that goes down to the sea of Tyre, so it flashed along the shore by Berytus and Tripoli, and Laodicea of Syria, and the strange story was dropped from the line at Antioch, then the most lordly and magnificent city in the world. It crossed the battle plain of Issus; it blazed along the Taurus. It crossed the hills above Philadelphia, it leaped the mountain passes above Colosse, it lit with starlight radiance the waters of the Archipelago as it went from hill to hill by Troystira and Pergamos, and over Ida, 'many fountained Ida,' and the Plains of Troy. From the summit of high Olympus (Olympus in Asia) the inhabitants of the new city of Constantine saw the flash of the expected message, and their shouts and hymns of thanksgiving in the mid streets answered the enthusiastic rejoicings of the people in Jerusalem." The towers of Helena stand in mournful ruin along the route of that despatch. It would not be surprising if the wires of Morse's invention are sometimes affixed to the walls of those very towers. There would be singular fitness in this, and the mind would be irresistibly directed by the coincidence to the message which Professor Morse himself caused to be first sent over the first wire established (that between Baltimore and Washington) giving to God the glory of the grand achievement of modern time.

Life Wasted through Ignorance.

Valuable lives are thus thrown away through ignorance of some of the simplest facts of apparently every day of judgment in matters where errors become a crime. Some of the best and wisest and greatest men of our race have, previously from the world, in consequence of what might be considered a curable cause, a cold, a cough, or an improper drink or meal, or, as in the case of Lord Bacon's death was sleeping in a damp bed. Any old woman, who "didn't know if from a bull's foot," would have told more than that.—Yet it was the fatal error of the greatest mind of the age and generation.

Washington's dying words seem to have been heard and heeded and revealed beyond his death by taking the advice of a physician, instead of his physicians. Abbot Lawrence, the financier and the philanthropist, brought on his last illness by an injudicious change of clothing.

Rachel, the greatest tragic actress of her time, took a cold which carried her to her grave, by riding from New York to Boston in cars not sufficiently warmed, on a bitter cold winter's night, immediately after a performance, which had heated up her whole system far beyond its natural standard. J. Addison Alexander, for whom it was claimed that he was the best Bible scholar living, and that he had powers of mind not equalled in his day, died in the very prime of life, because, "having a feeling almost bordering on contempt for physicians," he allowed his mortal malady to prey upon him secretly; and the day he died he thought he was going to get well. Because he knew nothing about disease he concluded, with all his resplendent intellect, the man who had made a life-long study, knew nothing about it. The magnificent deduction cost him his life. And now another name comes up to our notice, in the same connection, as illustrating the fact, that the greatest minds are capable of follies most amazing. The philosopher, the scholar, the soldier, and the Christian, were all blended in the name of Professor Mitchell, the great astronomer, the gallant soldier, and resistless general. His was the greatest loss to the nation, up to this hour of the contest, and yet his life was literally thrown away, by his own inconsiderate act; by doing deliberately what we would suppose the commonest mind in the nation would have regarded as exceedingly dangerous; and it is named here to benefit the living, without prejudice to the honored and lamented dead. Gen. Mitchell was attacked by symptoms of yellow fever; his physician acted promptly, and labored to restore the functions of the skin, to cause prespiration, which every professional man acknowledges to be the turning point for life in that disease. It was eventually brought about to the unspeakable joy of his medical attendant, Dr. Thomas T. Stanley, at 12 M., October 28, 1862; but when he returned, two hours later, his patient had been attacked with a chill, the pulse went up from 85 to 120, the General having got up and ordered his bed to be changed, while in this prespiring condition, Delirium set in, and he died, the attending surgeon leaving this record:—"I am of opinion that had Gen. Mitchell remained in bed, and kept the skin in good condition, he would without doubt have recovered."—Hall's Journal of Health.

A Mother's Faith.

Among the many striking instances of God's care of His persecuted people, is recorded the case of Mrs. Mason in Scotland. At the time we refer to, her husband was hiding in the mosses which spreads over a great part of Galloway. Thither he was driven by Claverhouse, and there he was hidden till peace again give a breathing time to God's servants.

When the Covenanters in the district determined to have divine service, and for this purpose the godly Mr. Renwick arranged to meet them in a lonely glen beyond the mosses, Mrs. Mason decided to attend. Accordingly she took her infant babe, and shutting up her house and committing her four children to God, she set out on her perilous journey.

Returning from the meeting, a neighbor met her and told her her house was destroyed and all her children by fire.—Looking calmly at the trembling messenger, she replied: "It is impossible; before I left home I gave my children to God, and I know they are safe." To all the assurances of her friend she steadily answered: "It is impossible." Hastening forward, she speedily found her faith confirmed, for her house and children were safe, and eagerly looking for her return. The flames which had alarmed her neighbor arose from a small cottage on the next farm. Turning to her friends, she said: "I told you God would keep them safe, and I was right."

This woman lived long after the darkness of persecution had passed away, and her children all died in good old age, faithful servants of the mother's faithful God. Her husband too came forth from his refuge, and bore witness for many days to the Master's truthfulness.—Amer, Messenger.

RESOURCES OF AMERICA.—A few figures lately obtained from the Department of Agriculture tell a story which the world would do well to consider. Our total agricultural export (exclusive of cotton) in 1860—when we were yet at peace—were $80,949,556, of which southern ports exported $19,738,265. In 1861, with half a million of men in arms and no southern exports, the amounted to $137,926,505, and in 1862, with a million of men in the field (one-half of them from the rural districts) and no southern exports, they reached the sum of $155,162,047. The amount of wheat and flour alone exported in the year ending September 1, 1862, exceeded that of the previous year by over seven millions of bushels.

Copper is believed to exist in large quantities in Lake, a township north of Mnemora.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 24TH, 1863.

THE BUDGET.

Mr. Howland's speech on the opening of Budget was a great success. Destitute of every rhetorical embellishment and grace, it grappled with its subject, in all details, in a masterly manner. He does not, in the least, seek to magnify the dangers possibly before the country, nor does he wish to make them appear less than they really are. In the very outset he intimates that he does not at present intend to unfold any scheme of permanently restoring the equilibrium between the income and expenditure of the country. This, in his opinion, is a grave subject, and requires more care and thought than the short time he has been in office has yet afforded him. The magnitude of our debt does not frighten him, if he can only be successful in inaugurating a new and sound system of finance than the rotten one that has cursed Canada for years past. Our expenditure exceeds our income by millions, and Mr. Holton knows of no plan by which, magician-like, he can waste these millions into existence. There is only one legitimate way: to increase the taxation and to decrease the public expenditure to the lowest possible limits. And this is a right way. Of course, we all looked for a deficiency in the present year, and we find it to be $1,176,510. But this, be it remembered, strictly belongs to the transactions of the year. There are other burdens which will swell the deficiency to over $4,000,000. Mr. Holton, in bringing forward the different liabilities, gives the darkest tints to the picture. He tells the simple truth; and does not, like Mr. Galt, seek to varnish over, by smooth words and high sounding terms, that which will not stand investigation. What the real debt of the Province is there has been much difference of opinion; and statements have been made regarding it, very wide from each other. The net interest on the debt is $3,553,353, which, as Mr. Holton says, capitalised at 5 per cent. would show a debt of $70,000,000. In 1857 the excess of expenditure over income was $2,011,770; in 1858, $2,229,487; in 1859, $726,833; in 1860, $2,923,465; in 1861, $1,626,039; in 1862, $2,277,817—making an average annual increase to the provincial debt of $2,000,000. For the present year, he estimates the income at $9,016,588; and the expenditure, $10,911,098—leaving a deficiency of $1,894,510, which certain reductions being made there from may be reduced to $1,176,510, as stated above. It is obvious, a loan must be resorted to for the present, until the Finance Minister mature his scheme of keeping the expenditure with the income. With regard to the measures for doing this, he speaks with great caution. He realises the task before him, and does not wish to promise too much. Such a scheme cannot be improvised; it can only be successfully elaborated after deep and patient study. Mr. Holton has, however, in a measure, intimated the plan which we may expect him to adopt in the solution of the knotty financial problem which he has before him. The Globe thus indicates it:—

"Retrenchment in expenditure—resumposition of canal tolls—and laying the burden of certain portions of the present expenditure on localities instead of on the Provincial revenue. The general commercial policy which accompanies this special programme is eminently sound and liberal. The enlargement of the canals, the alteration of the tariff so as to bring the Province as nearly as possible into accord with the Free Trade policy of the mother country, are measures much to be desired, and we only hope Mr. Holton will remain Minister of Finance long enough to take a good step towards the accomplishment of his purposes. When Parliament meets again for a long session, a few weeks or months hence, there will be ample time for discussing these important questions. In the meantime, we hope the factious motions of the Opposition will be speedily voted down, and members permitted to attend to their Fall business."

MR. CONGER.

It is with feeling of no small pain and regret that we have watched the course that our member has pursued since he has re-entered Parliament. We must confess—to use the least harsh term—that we have been disappointed. But we are not the only ones who have been disappointed; for many of those who have shown themselves to be his warmest friends and supporters, have declared that Mr. Conger's conduct is to them altogether inexplicable, and what they were not at all led to expect or look for. In stating this, we do not refer to those who opposed him before the late election and then came out in his favour; but to those who have always stuck to him—to use a vulgar saying—through thick and thin, in prosperity and adversity. What opinion his "new" friends entertain of his course, it is superfluous for us to say. In fact, they don't say much; but when they do say anything, it is only to exhibit—however much against the grain—that they have been completely "sold." All here expected that Mr. Conger would, at least, give the Government a fair and impartial trial. On this condition, and with this expectation was Mr. Conger elected. Indeed, Mr. Conger distinctly promised to more persons than one, that he would do so; but on what grounds he defends the non-redemption of his promise, we, in common with our fellow-represented, are unable to reach.

There is one thing, however, which is an incontrovertible fact, that is: no Cartier-Macdonald man could have been elected in the Township of Peterborough at the last election. We hope Mr. Conger will no longer continue to pursue a course so unpopular among his constituents, and which will tend to alienate from him that sympathy and support which might continue to be his, and which are too valuable to be lightly thrown away.

VOTE OF NON-CONFIDENCE.

The great Colonial non-confidence motion, which the Opposition and the Leader vaunted for months past would be carried, and the Ministry ousted, has been voted upon, and the Ministry has come off victorious. So it ought. The attack upon it, shorn of the opulent venom of its enemies, has left the Ministry stronger than before. It will rally to its support those in whose breasts dwell the principles of fair-play, and a regard for the interests of the Province. The Opposition must see now that they cannot defeat the Ministry. Every effort has been tried and has failed. Public business has been obstructed and delayed by the persistent factiousness of those Canadian "Copperheads," whose fury knows no bounds—as time after time they have seen the utter futility of their efforts. But among the Opposition there are some who, although may in some respects be opposed to the personnel or the policy of the Ministry, are, in the main, "good men and true." These, we think, will now find it their duty to turn a new leaf, and to give that support to the Ministry which is necessary to enable it successfully and expeditiously to get through public business. The Opposition can do much in the way of the obstruction, but the Country has to pay the piper. Every day wasted entails a large expenditure of the public money. But what care our Copperheads, so long as they gratify their personal or party whims? The country, however, should care. What else is there in talking about economy, when we see those who should be the first to set an example in this respect, adopting a course which only can be pursued by reckless squandering of the people's money, that might be applied to better and more useful purposes—purposes for which money, however much wanted, cannot be got. A fact.

The vote on the motion was 63 nays to 61 yeas—giving the Ministry a majority of 2. Dr. Bown, who was elected and has hitherto declared himself a Ministerialist, "skedaddled" to the Opposition. Mr. Buchanan kept him company. We are glad to see that Mr. Foley came out on the right side. We hope he will not allow personal differences to interfere with his support of those great principles which he has so ably advocated for years. If he has been wronged, the better way is to "forbear." His countrymen will do him justice in good time. Mr. Sylvain, a Government supporter, was absent; M. M. Perrault and Boutillier paired off. Our member voted—WRONG. We are sorry for our own sakes and his that he did so.

BACK COUNTRY.

In our issue of last week appeared a letter from a "Traveller," which showed a very considerable acquaintance with the section of the country of which he writes. What he says of that part of our back country is, no doubt, true of other parts. The remarks which he makes with regard to the importance of opening up Colonization roads and the benefits derivable therefrom are highly suggestive. There are, no doubt, thousands of acres of good land in the rear of our country, locked up, which, under judicious management, and by a small expenditure of money, might be thrown open to settlers, and, in course of time, converted into good farms—homes for a sturdy race of thrifty and industrious agriculturists. This is no visionary idea; it is what these best acquainted with the nature and resources of the region are ready to affirm, and the truth of which we feel convinced practical experiment will fully establish. But some inducements must be held out to those who wish to settle. They must not be intimidated and frightened off by the apathy and indifference of those whose duty and interest it alike ought to be to assist in a proper colonization of the now waste lands. In no better way can this be done than by opening up those Colonization Roads, which are, as it were, the great arteries of travel and business to those who make their homes in the wilds of our land, without which it is almost impossible to reach a market to buy or sell. When a Colonization Road is once constructed, it soon becomes tapped, if we can use the expression in innumerable places by by-roads, that are laid out by the settlers, with an energy and a rapidity that are surprising. We know of no scheme, plan or policy more deserving of the attention and support of a government, than that which settles the waste lands at its disposal, with energetic and pushing immigrants, thus alike augmenting the population and the material wealth of the country. We hope our Government will give that attention to the matter its intrinsic importance demands. If, this year, by the factious conduct of the Opposition, it has been unable to do anything in the furtherance of so important a work, we sincerely hope that next year it will show that its assigned reason for non-action during the present year is a reality and not an excuse, as its enemies would have us believe. There are matters connected with this subject to which we intend referring more specifically hereafter.

HABEAS CORPUS ACT.

The United States Congress, last winter, passed an Act, under which the President has recently suspended the Habeas Corpus Act. As might be expected, this is viewed in quite different lights by the Government and Democratic parties. The latter say it is a fatal blow at the liberties of the nation; the former declare that a careful perusal of the Act will make any intelligent man proof against the impassioned efforts of partisan demagogues to excite alarm on behalf of the rights and liberties of American citizenship; and that the Act, while it authorises a suspension of the habeas corpus, makes scrupulous provisions of means whereby all persons arrested, except those arrested and held as prisoners of war, are assured a judicial examination into the causes of their detention, and are practically remanded to the ordinary jurisdiction of the United States Court; and that while the suspension of the writ is nothing more than the substitution of one process for securing justice and vindicating the rights of the citizen for another; and that while advantage is gained in depriving the enemies of the Government of a too available weapon of mischief, no disadvantage or wrong is experienced by the people. What the practical working or result of the President's Act may be, it is impossible to tell. It is an extraordinary measure, but in extraordinary times and dangers, extraordinary measures must sometimes be adopted.

Sale.—We draw particular attention to the Sale advertised by Messrs. Lerehig & Co. in another column. The advertisement speaks for itself.

LONDON TIMES.

The Leaders and journals opte generis are often fond of parading in their columns extracts from the London Times relating to Canadian matters. But we have in vain looked for an article from the Thunderer, which, in the greatest state of affairs, comes very opportunely. The Times often betrays ignorance of American topography, and no very intimate acquaintance with the feelings and customs of us Canadians. This article, however, teems with good sense and good advice, yet the Leader and its followers have passed it by unnoticed. In commencing by stating the difficulties a Government has to encounter in a new country like ours, where there are so many changes, and so old traditional land-marks to guide statesmen. It then enters into a short history of the causes which led to the late dissolution of Parliament and the subsequent changes that took place in the Macdonald-Sicotte Ministry. In doing so, it refers to the Macdonald-Cartier Administration, the Double-Shuffle game, and all the circumstances connected with the defeat of that Administration. It defends and endorses the course which the present Premier, adopted on the defeat of the Macdonald-Sicotte Ministry, in appealing to the country, and shows that it was not only constitutionally right, but that it was the only one left for him to follow, to protect and promote the interests of the Province. The conclusion of the article is well worthy of the serious study and consideration of those who are above the mean grovelling spirit of faction and disappointed ambition. Let it be read carefully, and with the frame of mind it ought, and it will not be without its weight. It is as follows:

"The new Parliament has just met, and so far as its proceedings have gone at present, there is, we are glad to find, some hope that the Ministry may hold their own; but they are not strong and another Ministerial crisis is not at all impossible. We trust, however, that Lord Monck will be able in some way to mediate between the contending parties, and put a stop to this incessant series of Ministerial transformations. All parties appear to admit that they have no cause to complain of the manner in which the dissolution has been used, and Lord Monck may be the stronger for having had the resolution to take matters out of the hands of so irresolute and quarrelsome an assembly. The Canadians have matters of quite sufficient importance to attend to without wasting their time in perpetual warfare. They would be wise to drop the amusement of these endless crises, and address themselves in earnest to the task of putting themselves in a fit state of defence against their threatening and intemperate neighbour.

DOMINGO.

The so-called "rebellion" in the Spanish part of the island of Hayti appears all at once to be far from quenched, as was stated by the Spanish papers of Havana. Regiment after regiment is leaving Cuba for St. Domingo. There is a report that in a battle on that island one Spanish regiment was taken prisoner, and all killed, the Spaniards having given no quarter. A Spanish fleet, also, on September 6, bombarded and destroyed Porta-au-Platte, as is said, without any notice whatever, and in consequence killing many women and children. A "rebel" army of 14,000 is said to be in the field. Says an American paper, St. Domingo is an old battle field of freedom. Let us hope it will remain free. It is the weakness of the United States that emboldens Spain to her villainous attempt to re-enslave this island—as scheme as vile as Napoleon's against Mexico, and motived and protected by the same considerations.

TAHITI.

Advices from Tahiti announce the seizure there of another vessel by the French authorities for being engaged in the infamous traffic of kidnapping Kanakas into slavery. A large Peruvian brig, supposed to be engaged in the business, recently came into port and was seized, and the officers and crew were cast into prison. The accounts of this traffic, as perpetrated in the South Pacific, are almost beyond belief. At the islands of Raratonga and Mangea, about six hundred miles southwest of Tahiti, a large number of Kanakas have been treacherously kidnapped. A number of these poor fellows have been sent back to their homes by the Peruvian Government, which apparently thinks slavery too great a blessing to be squandered on mere Kanakas. These fine islands, once so thickly inhabited, are fast becoming depopulated by the use of "fire water," and the terrible fatality of those diseases and vices that the whites have sown broadcast among the natives.

MEXICO.

News from Mexico of a late date.—The French have not yet got through their work of subjugation. The National party are yet strong, and seem determined to offer resistence in spite of all the advantages of the French commander. Juraez has his head quarters at San Luis de Potosi. Forey remains in Mexico, and gives out that he intends to resume military operations after the rainy season. Decrees of various kinds are put forth by Forey and his creatures the "Notables," who voted the call to Maximilian. By the way, one jocular German says he should spell his name Maximilian in compliment to his Kingdom, and another that it should spell its name Mexico, in compliment to him. Maximilian would be better, and would serve either or both.

POLAND.

It is reported that the Czar is about to grant quite a liberal Constitution to Poland, with a separate Representative Body, Native Officers, the official use of th Polish tongue, etc. We hope the report may prove true. Who think that this is all the Poles will be able to get under the circumstances. The great Western powers are not willing to interfere in the troubles now existing. Indeed, if they get this the rebellion will not have been in vain.

BODY FOUND.

On Friday last, while out fishing, in a bay near Stoney Lake, Messrs. R. Patterson, A. Cohen, R. Knox and J. Baptie found the body of the unfortunate young man, Falwasser, who was drowned last fall while fresh was completely stripped from the body. in the pursuit of a deer over the ice. It was lying on the shore.

Removal.—We would call attention to the fact Mr. S. White has removed his Boot and Shoe Store to Messrs. Hopkins & Cox's Building. It is said that White is "some" in the boot line.

Messrs. Glass, Elliott & Co.'s propositions to lay a new submarine cable across the Atlantic next year has been accepted by the Company. We may, therefore, hope to see this great work entered upon early next spring.....There is said to be a reduced tendency to bring about a union between the Church of England and the Greek Church. Prof. Stanley and the Guardian favor the measure; but it cannot be approved of by the Evangelical party.....It is stated that while the average number of communicants in the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland is 291, in Canada it is only 151.....The cruiser Florida has been received and refitted in the French harbor of Brest.....It is confidently stated that there is now stored at the South more than 3,000,000 bales of cotton. How much is pledged to John Bull is not mentioned.....The first Income Tax under the new Internal Revenue law is now being collected in all parts of the country, and it will be much larger, in the aggregate probably, than was estimated.....The war debt of the Southern Confederacy is now estimated at $1,200,000,000.....Connecticut has $48,000,000 invested in manufacturing, giving employment to 60,000 persons.....A gentleman from Plattsburg is exhibiting at Montreal a monster mushroom, which grew in three weeks and four days. The same is 3 feet 6 to 4 feet in circumference, and weighs nine and a half pounds.....Lord Brougham is to preside at the meeting of the Social Science Congress, to be held at Edinburgh this month.....New Governors are to be appointed for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.....There were last week at Cape May, it is stated, about 6,000 visitors.....We regret to announce the death of Cortland Freer, Esq., Manager of the Grand Trunk in the Lower District.....The Coroner's Jury at the inquest on the body of Mr. Wm. Gibbard, have returned a verdict of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown.....A young man of the name of Row, Brookville, lately got part of his jaw shot off, through the carelessness of a companion in capping a double barrelled gun.....Shoe-making is done extensively in Haverhill, Mass., by the women.....The amount of gas consumed at the Grand Hotel, Paris, costs annually 130,000f.....A severe snow storm occurred on Lake Superior, on the last week in August.....The mortality rate in New York during the present season has been three times as much as in London.....The Catholics of Liverpool, England, are organizing a Reformatory School to reclaim neglected children.....They tell of a Cubian lady at a ball last week in Saratoga, whose dress and diamonds were valued at $70,000.....There are three fathers in East Nottingham Township, Chester County, Pa., who have fourteen sons in the Union army.....A pioneer company of Emigrants to the State of Delaware will go thither from the North in the course of a month.....There is a large tobacco field at Hatfield, Mass., for the crop of which New York speculators have offered $40,000.....An address by many influential electors of Ottawa has been presented to Mr. Currier, urging him to support the Government. Better be warned in time.....The pay of the Lieutenant-Governor of N.Y. State is $6 a day and mileage. When Sanford E. Church was Lieutenant-Governor his bills for mileage made his compensation run up to five and six thousand dollars a year. Rather steep!!.....

Another considerate act of Queen Victoria has just come to light. When the death of Lord Clyde became known in Germany, she immediately wrote home, expressing her desire that he should be interred in Westminster Abby. Lord Clyde, with his instinctive modesty, never dreamed of such a distinction, and had requested that he might be interred with as little display as possible in Kensal Green Cemetery.....A newspaper correspondent, writing from the Lake Superious country, remarks: "The healthy influence of this northern region passes all belief. Here may be found hundreds whose lives were despaired of, while living East and South, who now enjoy vigorous health. To my surprise, I find a large number of colored residents here who are said to stand the climate as well as their white neighbors."

.....The Buffalo Courier learns that an immense amount of fifty cent United States currency notes is manufacturing in New York State. The officers in that city are on the alert for the distributors of the trash. It is stated, that at least forty thousand dollars of this counterfeit currency was in Buffalo no later than two weeks ago.....The Toronto Globe, in announcing the death of Mr. R. F. Gourley, at Edinburgh on the 1st of August, says:—"This is the last of an able and honest man, who once played a prominent part in Canada in defence of the right of free speech and printing, in opposition to a tyrannical faction." Mr. Gourley was in the eighty-fifth year of his age.....The claims for damages during the New York riots, have reached the sum of two million dollars.

Canada Presbyterian Church.—The Rev D. Watrs was inducted at Port Hope end of August.——Mr. McWilliam is to be ordained at Bowmanville on the 23rd Sept. ——The Foreign Missions Committee has appointed the Rev. Mr. Duff to British Columbia.——Call have been presented from Glenallan to Rev. T. McGuire, from Streetsville to Rev. W. Lundy, and from Carrick to Rev. W. Hay. The latter call has been accepted.——The M. Y. Stark, for 30 years minister of Dundas, has intimated his desire to retire on account of ill health.——The Rev. R. Jamieson, writing from New Westminster, British Columbia, states that he expects the new Church to be finished early in September. The had 21 names on the communion roll.

Robuck.—A recent London letter says. "Retribution is already throwing its shadow over the unfortunate Mr. Robuck. Even Sheffield is beginning to feel the weight of the incubus that has so long oppressed it. A requisition is now signing by numerous voters of that town, to Mr. J. Brown, the present Mayor, praying him to allow himself to be put in nomination for the representation of that borough in Parliament at the next general election. The movement is openly avowed to special against Mr. Robuck, and will doubtless be successful."

A Large Business.—Since the reduction of the through fares on the Great Western Railway, the through passenger traffic has increased enormously. A few evenings ago the express train east had 15 cars crowded with passengers. The trains going west usually requires seven or eight cars to give the necessary accommodation. These trains equal, if they do not exceed, those in the hey-day of the good times some eight years ago.

CAMP MEETING.

The Wesleyans have been holding a Camp Meeting for the last week, about a mile northwest of the Town. A large number of persons have been in attendance; on Sunday afternoon the number present has been variously estimated from 3,000 to 5,000. In the evening a most solemn and picturesque sight is presented at the camp. The impassioned speaker—the earnest hearers—the large fires shooting their spiral flames to the heavens,—the wild waving of the forest foliage—the bright, brilliant stars in the canopy above—all go to form a picture which it is more easy to imagine than to describe. At such a time, and under such circumstances, if a man has any deep feelings of soul, they surely ought to be called out. The meeting will be continued on for some time longer. It is to be hoped that great good will be the result.

DEATH OF WM. WELLER, ESQ.

We regret to announce the death of Wm. Weller, Esq., of Cobourg, father of C. A. Weller, Esq., of this place, who died on the evening of Monday, the 21st inst. He was interred yesterday with all the honors of the Masonic body, of which he has long been a zealous and active member. We cordially sympathise with the the bereaved in their affliction.

AMERICAN NEWS.

There has been a great fight in George between Rosecrans and Bragg. It was first rumoured that the Federals were utterly defeated; but later news is more favorable to the North. Rosecrans has fallen back to wait for Burnside, who is on the march to join him. Great numbers have fallen both sides.

TOWNSHIP FAIR.

The Township Fair for Smith, Harvy, Ennismore and North Douro, will be held in Lakefield on Tuesday, 29th inst. From the wealth and enterprise of these townships, and from the liberal prizes offered, we anticipate a fine "turn out" on the occasion. There ought to be, anyway.

WANTED.

First.—The man who can read either of the Local Papers through in ten minutes.

Second.—The other man who can do the same thing in five minutes.

Such geniuses should be caged and sent to Barnum.

Ice for Diptheria.—A correspondent of the Providence Journal confirms the theory of a French Physician, recently published, and vouches for the efficacy of ice as a cure for Diptheria, Croup, and all ordinary inflamation of the throat. The manner of application is as follows:—Break up a small lump of ice in a towel, and put the pieces in bowl; take a position slightly inclined backwards, either in a chair or on a sofa; proceed for half an hour with a teaspoon to feed yourself with small lumps of ice, letting them dissolve slowly in the back part of the mouth or entrance to the throat. A single such application will often break up a common sore throat, which would otherwise have a course of two or three days. In case of ulceration or diptheria, keep a small lump of ice constantly in the mouth.

Grand Trunk Accounts.—The London Times says:—The accounts for the half-year of the Grand Trunk Railway show the total receipts from all sources to have been £424,340, against £382,991 for the corresponding half of 1862, and £317,110 in 1861. The expenses have been 68·83 per cent., against 77·24 in the same period of 1862. The prospects of continued recovery are believed to be satisfactory, but the company are still impeded by the absence of prompt dealing on the part of the Canadian Government.

The Habeas Corpus Act.—The Albany Journal, in defending President Lincoln, in his late suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, says:—"When, in 1814, Gen. Jackson suspended the Writ of Habeas Corpus, the old Federal Gazette, of this city, howled just as the Atlas and Argus howls now, and that is the reason the city, then and ever before strongly Federal, became Democratic.

The Philadelphia Press remarks that the New York World says the Democratic party declares for "a policy of conciliation." Mr. Maury tells us that Mr. Vallandigham, the World's hero-martyr, is only awaiting an opportunity to 'array Ohio against Lincoln.' How are we to reconcile these conflicting statements?

The Harvest in Great Britain.—Owing to the increase in the yield, the harvest is estimated by Edglish authorities to be worth £20,000,000 to £30,000 more than that of last year, and there will consequently be no necessity for the importation of large supplies of breadstuffs from abroad.

Volunteer Review.—There will be a grand Volunteer Review in Toronto on the 8th of next month. Volunteers will be conveyed from Peterborough to Toronto and back for $1.50. They will be "found" while there.

To Advertisers.—Now is the time to advertise, and the Examiner is the paper to advertise in.

The Teachers convention will meet in the G. and U. School building, on Saturday next, at 11 a. m.

MR. COCKBURN.

The greatest parliamentary failure yet discovered, is, certainly, the member for West Northumberland. Ambitious and ought to obtain power and shedding among his fellows, he has been and is pursuing a course which must soon cover him with obloquy and defeat. Elected to oppose the Cartier-Macdonald ministry, he has thrown himself into the arms of these gentlemen, and does not hesitate to degrade himself (politically speaking) to do their dirtiest work. He has received several sound and well-deserved drubbings in the House; but still he seems determined not to mend his ways. Even McGee had to take him to task for the manner in which he was acting. It is to be hoped his constituents will teach him a lesson when he next asks their suffrages. We cannot see the reason that Sidney Smith should be sacrificed, and Cockburn—who is certainly as reprehensible in his conduct, if not more so—should be allowed to pass unrebuked and unpunished. It is neither fair nor consistent.

BURNHAM ELECTED.

Mr. Burnham has been elected for the Newcastle Division by the large majority of 743 over his opponent. This was not altogether unexpected. Both gentlemen are, in private life, irreproachable; but Mr. Burnham enjoys the advantage of being widely and favorably known from the prominent part he has taken in different local and provincial enterprises. The idea of calling Mr. Burnham a new man is a rich one. It just shows what the Leader knows about the matter. He served in the Lower House from 1844 to 1848, has been President of the Provincial Association, and has occupied the high and responsible position of Treasurer of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham for many years. Mr. Clark has not been much engaged in a public capacity; but both friends and foes accede him the abilities of no mean order; and we have no doubt he would have honorably distinguished himself had he been the fortunate candidate. Better luck next time.

RELIGIOUS SINCERITY.

To make it an excuse for a man that he is sincere in his error, is to charge God with the man's sin. For if it be alleged that his error is the result of his constitution the fault must be in the maker of that constitution—that is God. If it be alleged that the fault is in his training the must be in the Ruler of Events—that is God. If it be alleged that the fault is in the obscurity of the Scriptures, the fault must be in the author of the Scriptures—that is God. If it be alleged that the fault arises from the want of the means of Grace, the fault must be in the Great Head of the Church—and that is God. But if the fault be that the man himself wants an honest and good heart, that he neglects and refuses to be instructed, or to be guided, or to be helped to know and do his duty, then, plainly, the fault is in the man himself, and in no other. And this is precisely the case. God has provided in Christ a full redemption, in the Bible a complete revelation of Christ, and sent His Holy Spirit to reveal Christ in the Bible, and to form Christ in the heart, and to work in those who are christians both to will and to do, of his own good pleasure; and none are lost but those who refuse or neglect the means of grace thus pressed upon their attention and regard. So that they are without excuse who do not yield to the Spirit drawing them to Christ in the Scriptures, and to the truth in the love of it, and to the obedience of the truth in righteousness and charity.—Com.

CONSUMPTION IN COLD COUNTRIES.

There has been much difference of opinion among doctors about the benefits derived by patients going to warm climates. But we find that statistics show that consumption is most prevalent in countries where cold most prevails. Dr. Augustus A. Gould in his remarks upon the Registration Report for 1861, expresses the opinion, arrived at from the comparison of national and and state statistics, that consumption is the most fatal in Massachusetts of any state in the Union. The number of deaths of consumption in Massachusetts in 1861 was 4,845; in all New England, 11,792; in New York 8,207; Pennsylvania, 5,012; Ohio, 3,495; Oregon, 21; California, 324; Minnesota, 151; Wisconsin. 910; Indiana, 1,704; Kentucky, 1,742; Illinois, 1,948; Tennessee, 1,440; Kansas, 107; Louisiana, 853; Missouri, 1,302; Florida, 97; Iowa, 748. Throughout the United States, 48,803. By these statistics the fact is demonstrated that consumption positively, regularly and largely diminish as we proceed from the colder to the warmer states. An atmosphere in which cold moisture predominates, according to Dr. H. F. Bowditch, in his able work on the subject, largely disposes to consumption. The extreme steady cold of the West is preferable to the atmosphere of New England.

The Sentence of Hymen Francis, the Robber.—The Rochester Express says the young German, Hymen Francis, who stole a satchel containing $13,000 belonging to a Memphis money broker, was arraigned in Court of Sessions last evening, and pleaded guilty. He was sentenced to Auburn five years. His attempt to escape from Jail did not give him any claim to leniency.

The Vanderbilt.—A letter has been received by a Mr. Morgan, in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, from his son on board the United States steamer Vanderbilt, dated the 17th of August. This is four days later than the advices received from the ship by the Navy Department, and eleven days later than the date on which she is said to have been sunk by the rebel pirate.

Provincial Fair.—This Fair is now going on in Kingston. There is a fine display of different articles. We will give particulars in our next.

CRICKET.

The sixth match of this season between these two Elevens, came off on Tuesday, and resulted in an easy victory for the Gentlemen of our country by two runs and nine wickets, the following is the score:—

CONFEDERATE RAMS.

[From the Star.]

The assertion that the formidable steam rams equipped by Mr. Laird are for French accounts is an evident subterfuge. No person in France has a right to open such an account unless authorized by the French government and it has not yet been insinuated that the Emperor Napoleon has employed British ship-builders to provide him with formidable iron-plated ships of war. The French flag and the eastern names are both for purposes of deception, and the public have a right to call for an immediate inquiry into the real destination of the vessels. If the destination be honest the ship-builders can have no difficulty in satisfying the government of the fact by exhibiting the building contract, when it will at once be known whether the contracting parties are the accredited representatives of any foreign power with whom we are at amity, and not engaged in a war with relation to which we have proclaimed our neutrality. The people of the United States can scarcely be expected to tolerate any more fooling in a matter so vitally concerning their highest interests. Now can the people of this country longer suffer their ports to be made the scene of criminal enterprises against a kindred nation, at once threatening to plunge us into a shameful war, and laying down a precedent by which in the event of war, we should suffer the most grievous injury. Nay, even the ruling of the Chief Baron in the Alexandra case, however favorable to enterprises of the kind, in violation of the Foreign Enlistment act, requires, in this new and more aggravated contravention of the statute, the instant application of the legal remedies.

(From the Birmingham Post.)

The question now is, will the government take any steps to ascertain the character and destination of the ships lying at Liverpool and Glasgow, and will any effort be made to stop them until these questions are satisfactorily answered? From the abundant evidence as regards the state of feeling in America, it is evident that if by consent, or connivance, these vessels get out to sea, and pass into the confederate service, we may as well begin to make our preparations for war. This conclusion being inevitable, it behooves the English people to consider very carefully what is their duty under these circumstances. As we believe, their first and most important duty is to avoid war with America. We do not counsel slavish submission to the whims of the American people. But in the present case it seems to us that the Americans ask at the hands of England nothing but the barest justice.

REVENUE.

An estimate was next given to the receipts Customs yielded up to the 30th June, $2,103,087. Mr. Holton estimated that they would yield for the whole year $3,000,000, which is $400,000 less than Mr. Howland's estimate, made in the Spring, which was based on the increase of receipts during the first four months of the year, as compared with the corresponding period of the former year. In the following two months, there has been such a decrease, that he had reduced the estimate to $3,850,000, but an improvement in the returns for July and August, had warranted him in raising it to $3,000,000. The excise, he expected, would yield $750,000; Post-office, 400,000; ocean-postage (a large balance being due by the American Government) $150,000; public works, $516,000; Provincial steamers, $45,000; territorial, $500,000; casual, $15,000; interest on investments, $197,478; Bank impost, $36,000; premium on Indian lands $200,000; debentures and stock, $105,125; sinking fund realised, $2,920,000; Municipal loan fund, $300,000, Grand Trunk Railroad, $60,000; Great Western do, $24,150; Northen do, $14,600; Montreal Harbour Commissioners, $18,500; Municipalities Fund, U. C., $150,000; do, L.C., $25,000; Common School Fund, $143,000; Indian Fund $180,000—and a number of smaller items would bring up the total estimated receipts to to $12,191,713. Deducting for issues and redemption of public debt, $3,025,125, the proper estimated receipts for the year would be $9,016,588—falling short of the expenditure by $1,894,510.

Mr. Fenton, manufacturer, was engaged to Miss. Barber, daughter of a Liverpool cotton broker. The engagement lasted eighteen months, when Mr. Fenton, either repenting or irritated by bickerings, or as was hinted but not proved, disappointed, at his finance's means, wrote her a most frank and manly letter, telling her he had mistaken his own mind, and breaking off the engagement. The lady was still under eighteen; but her friends brought an action for breach of promise and the jury actually gave a verdict for £3,000 damages. The case was entirely without aggravated circumstances, and had the woman jilted the man he would never have recovered a penny. A few more actions of this kind, and men will be compelled to propose, "reserving all rights," to word their letters as cautiously as despatches, to stipulate that all kisses shall be "without prejudice," and only venture to flirt under counsel's advice. Statistics already complain of the superabundance of spinsters, but every victory of this kind ruins ten girls' chances of settlement.

The London Star of the 3rd inst. says:—"At a meeting of the Canada Agency Association, held to-day, the report, showing a steady and satisfactory progress in the business of the undertaking, was adopted, and an ad interim dividend at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum was declared.

Mr. SEWARD'S DIPLOMATIC CIRCULAR.

From The London Time, Sep. 4.

In its object this state paper is certainly intelligible. Mr. Seward is perfectly accurate in his presumption that the statesmen of France and England—he might have included, indeed, those of the rest of Europe—do consider to this very day that the old American Union can never be reconstructed. It is natural, too, that he should be desirous of receiving this conviction, but the argument which he employs for this purpose is both ineffective and needless—needless, because one will have failed to read every particle of his story, and ineffective, because, even if we accept it exactly as it is presented to us, it leaves our conclusions just what they were.

There might be some purpose in Mr. Seward's present exposition if either we in this country or the Americans in the federal states had begun by regarding the belligerents as equally matched, and the war as likely to be protracted on even terms for a long series of years. This, however, was not the case, and we are therefore not much impressed with the measure of success which Mr. Seward claims for his own side. In point of fact, letting one field with another, the South have gained more of victory than the North, and its holy cause apeacuous failure, indeed, was an attempt to bring the war to a close by the capture of the northern capital. Even now General Lee is by all accounts more likely to resume the offensive than General Meade, and though we do not think that the federals are preparing immediately to invade the territories of the confederates, we do hear that the confederates may be expected at any moment in the country of the federals. This is not much of a case for a power pretending so distinctly to superiority as to complain that the character of a belligerent is accorded to its rival. On that point, indeed, let any one read Mr. Seward's own descriptions, in this very document, of the strength, the numbers, and the bearing of the confederate armies, and then say if the South be not entitled to the designation of a belligerent. Why, in recording the battle of Antietam, the federal secretary is actually compelled to expatiate on the identical qualities of the contending forces, and to add that the northern soldiers were then proved, for the first time, to be not inferior in heroism and valor.

Practically, then, the very gist and essence of Mr. Seward's argument is fatal to its object. If all is true that he tells us, that all is infinitely short of what we were prepared to take for granted two years ago, without being any the more conscious of northern success. We thought the North would overrun the South in a brief campaign, but would then find its difficulties begin. Mr. Seward tells us that after two years of mortal struggle the North has not overrun a quarter of the South, having the difficulty still in prospect as before. We only conclude from this that the federals have not even that superiority for which we gave them credit, and that the relative strength of the confederates is by so much greater. If Mr. Seward really wishes to make converts of French and English statesmen, he must adopt a very different line of argument. He must show us either that the South is evincing a readiness to yield, or that the North has a policy which will admit of the restoration of the Union without this submission. But he shows neither of these things. On the contrary, he tells us that the Southern President has just proclaimed a levy en masse while of his own government he says nothing, except that he is preparing to prosecute the war as before. But what is to be the end? Europe thinks that the reconstruction of the Union by force of arms is an impossibility, and a very great number of Americans are of the same opinion. Europe also sees distinctly that the South gives not the slightest sign of concession, while even the fortunes of the war are not upon the whole very unevenly balanced. Not therefore without reason do we persist in our original opinion on the subject; but though Mr. Seward has thus lost his place, we can console him with the assurance that, so far as we are concerned, they were needlessly expended. In the "domestic controversies" which have cost upwards of 500,000 lives and at least 500 millions of money in two years, we have not the least design of interfering. The "

CORRUP TH GUTHAR.

Correspondence of the Boston Post.

New York, September 16.

The superintendent of the insurance department of this state must be getting up a sort of regular gallery. An official circular has been sent to the secretaries of all the fire, life, and marine insurance companies of the Empire State, requiring the cartes de visite of each secretary and president for the photographic album of the insurance department, which is designed to contain the photographs of all the underwriting officials in the state. The presumption is that Mr. Barnes, the superintendent, is a physiognomist, and by this process proposes to become possessed of the "phiz" of every insurance man, with a view to deciding what composition their officers faces being the test—need investigation and discipline. The fraternity, however, are notoriously too shrewd (not to refer to the uniform modesty) to allow Mr. Barns to detect them in a physicals of the character so temptingly contemplated by his circular.

At the pioneer meeting Mrs. Lincoln made her first public appearance since her return from rusticating in Vermont. From one of the front seats of the platform (where sat Oliver Johnson, Dr. Tyng, Mr. Bryant, and a host of radicals,) the President's wife permitted her round, red face to beam soulingly upon the vast mass of humanity who divulged their interest between the senator's eloquence and the wife of him who hopes to be sighed in future history the American Emancipator. It is said by those who are honored by an opportunity to listen to Mrs. Lincoln's lively conversation, that the idea has taken passionate possession of her mind that the great rail-and-rebellsplitter must be granted a renewal of his four years' lease of the White House, without regard to Mr. Chase's pretensions, Mr. Seward's intentions, or Mr. Stanton's aspirations. This idea has become a monomania with the elegant mistress of the executive mansion, and it shows itself in all she says, or does, or plans. Whether consorting with the radicals will help or hurt her illustrious husband's prospects for renomination is, however, a question which her conspicuous presence among them on Thursday evening will materially assist in answering.

The Democratic nominations for the approaching contest have been made. There would seem to be but little doubt as to the success of this ticket at the polls, and Republicans of shrewdness and observation already conceive the prospective passing away of the sceptre from their hands. The squabbles constantly taking place among the administrationists, as also the division and subdivision of personal ambition on the part of their leaders, leave but little ground of hope, while the recent overthrow of the directees of Mr. Chase, at Syracuse, places the balance of power in the hands of the Seward Weed clique, who will promptly fraternize with the Democracy as against the radicals. And so we go. NOR'WESTER.

THE CANADIAN MILITIA.—We have no doubt whatever that were Canada actually attacked, her population would spring up as one man, and emulate the bravery and devotion which they once before so successfully displayed. We have no doubt that the ranks of both militia and volunteers would fill rapidly, and that these bodies would do whatever manly spirit and patriotism could accomplish in supplementing the compact and admirably efficient regular force now in the colony. But to do all this with effect, perhaps to obviate any necessity for doing it, organization and some approach to military skill and discipline are requisite. These needful qualifications cannot be acquired in a moment, and it is most difficult to create them when the crisis which demands them has actually arrived. We are not surprised then to learn that one of the first points to which the Governor General directed attention, emphatically, in opening the Canadian Parliament was the militia law, and the necessity which exists of "extensive amendment" to make it effective. As it was the most prominent feature in his address, so we may hope it will be one of the earliest subjects to which the Legislature will have devoted its labors; and that, at least pending its satisfactory settlement, a truce between party leaders will be made, and a self-denying abstinence from what are comparatively small matters may be exhibited in the face of a great question which has never been neglected by any country deserving the enjoyment of liberty. The Imperial Government has already given good earnest of its desire to do its part in a work in which no doubt its honor is deeply concerned. But the safety and material interests, as well as the honor of the Canadians, are also concerned, and it is needless to argue that their co-operation should cordially and promptly be afforded to a work in which their's is the principal interest. —London (England) Post.

Official instructions were received by Colonel Ford, commanding Royal Engineers at Woodwich, announcing his appointment to the command of the corps in Canada, whither he is to proceed early in October to relieve Major General Servante, recently promoted by the death of Major General Oldfield. Colonel Ford will be relieved in his command at Woolwich on the 1st proximo by Col. Hawkins, R.E., who has been employed for some years past on the Boundary Commission between the United States and British territory, in the western portion of North America.—Times.

AUCTION SALE OF TIMBER LIMITS.

WILL be sold by Auction on Wednesday, 30th September, the following valuable one hundred and seventy-two square miles, belonging to the late firm of F. McGill & Co in liquidation, and situated on the River Lacoocanee, behind Bawden, in the County of Montcalm.

TIMBER LIMITS,

There is a large quantity of PINE which can be made either into saw logs or square timber. It is chiefly of large size and superior quality, owing to the hardwood soil and rolling character of the country. SPRUCE also abounds, and from the same causes, is of an unusual size. There is besides Tamarac, Cedar and Hardwood timber of various kinds.

The timber is on the average at no great distances from the river, and the country being well watered with lakes and small streams, the haulage is comparatively easy. The main river is generally favorable for driving.

A great advantage of these Limits is that Provisions and Provender can be delivered at the shanties at Montreal prices, owing to the Rawdon settlement being not further than 25 miles from the greatest body of Pine. There are roads fit for carting operations within a short distance of the limits, which enables supplies to be laid down cheaply and with facility.

Terms liberal. For inspection of plans and further information apply to COURT & MACINTOSH, Accountants.

Sale at ONE o'clock, at the Office of the Subscribers.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Between the dark and daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupation
That is known as the Children's Hour.

I hear in the chamber above me
The patter of little feet,
The sound of a door that is opened,
And voices soft and sweet.

From my study I see the lamplight,
Descending the hall stair,
A sudden blaze on the wainscot,
And I hear fairy voices,

A whisper, and then a silence;
Yet I know by their merry eyes
They are plotting and planning together
To take me by surprise.

A sudden rush from the stairway,
A sudden raid from the hall,
By three doors left unguarded
They enter my castle wall!

They climb up into my turret
O'er the arms and back of my chair;
If I try to escape they surround me;
They seem to be everywhere.

They have stormed the fortress with blows,
And I yield at discretion to you,
Till I think of the Bishop of Bingen
In his Mouse-Tower on the Rhine!

Do you think, O blue-eyed banditti,
Because you have scaled the wall,
Such an old moustache as I am
Is not a match for you all?

I have you fast in my fortress,
And will not let you depart,
But put you down into the dungeons
In the round-tower of my heart.

And there will I keep you forever,
Yes, forever and a day,
Till the walls shall crumble to ruin,
And moulder in dust away!

VARIETIES.

An Invitation to Dinner.

It was observed that a certain covetous rich man never invited any one to dine with him. 'I'll lay a wager,' said a wag, 'I get an invitation from him.

The wager being accepted, he goes the next day to the rich man's house about the time he was to dine, and tells the servant he must speak with his master immediately, for his son owes him a thousand pounds.

'Sir,' said the servant to his master, 'here is a man in great hurry to speak with you; he says he can save you a thousand pounds.'

Out came the master. 'What is that sir: you can save me a thousand pounds?'

'Yes, sir, I can, but I see you are at dinner; I will go away and call again.'

'O, pray sir, come in and eat dinner with me.'

'I shall be troublesome.'

'Not at all.'

The invitation was accepted. As soon as dinner was over, and the family retired.

'Well, sir,' said the man of the house, 'now to your business. Pray let me know how I am to save a thousand pounds.'

'Well, sir, I hear, sir, you have a daughter to dispose of in marriage.'

'I have, sir.'

'And you intend to portion her with ten thousand pounds.'

'I do, sir.'

'Why, then, sir, let me have her, and I will take her with nine thousand.'

The master of the house arose in a passion, and kicked him out of doors.

A WEDDING INCIDENT.

The story is told of a temperance man, who, being at a wedding, was asked to drink the bride's health in a glass of wine which was offered him. He refused to partake of the intoxicating liquid, and said when he drank her health it would be in that which resembles her most in purity, and knew nothing better than water, pure water! He then drank to her health in a glass of God's beverage—sparkling water. The ladies assembled on the occasion immediately stepped forward, and making a respectful courtesy, thanked him for the beautiful compliment he had just paid the fair bride, who as it was resolved that all intoxicating drinks should be banished from the room.

MORTALITY OF WHITE AND COLORED TROOPS COMPARED.—The incontrovertible advantage of sending colored troops to those parts of the South where the heat is so oppressive to white soldiers is emphatically shown by the list of the deaths in the Port Royal Hospital from July 1 to August 4. Of the white troops fifty-seven deaths are reported. Of the black soldiers only nine died during that period. Every enlarged estimate of what number died of sunstroke received in battle, when of the white soldiers 48 deaths were from disease. This is a most striking evidence of the "American case of African descent" to stand a climate which almost at once prostrates northern white men, and consigns them to early graves. In the Department of the Gulf, where white and colored are serving together, and equally exposed to malarious influences, the proportion of sick from diarrhea, dysentery, typhoid fevers, etc., is twelve times as great among the whites as among the colored. The same fact is observed in the reports of the British army for 1859, from which it appears that in Jamaica the ratio of mortality was 100 whites to 8 colored; in the Bahamas, 150 whites to 5½ colored; while in Sierra Leone the disproportion was so enormous as to show 410 deaths of white soldiers to 24 colored. Every principle of expediency, justice, and humanity therefore, calls for the employment of this element of our citizens in our southern armies.

DUNCAN'S REPLY.—A Highlander, who sold brooms, went into a barber's shop in Glasgow, to get shaved. The barber bought one of his brooms, and after having shaved him, asked him the price of it.

'Tippence,' said the Highlander.

'No, no,' said the shaver, 'I'll give you a penny, and if that does not satisfy you, take your broom again.'

The Highlander took it and asked what he had to pay.

'A penny,' says the barber.

'I'll gie ye a beebee,' says Duncan, 'and if that disna satisfy ye, pit on my beard again.'

TOO MUCH.—A little old boy, though unfortunately, asked his father:

'Is the gov'ner up stairs, Maria?'

'If you mean father—yes.'

'Well, then, tell him if he wants to speak to me about staying out late of a night, he had better come down and do so now, as I shave got an appointment at ten o'clock to take the whole Miss Sparkles! So lively, there's a good girl!'

LOGIC.—'I don't know what you mean by not being an Irishman,' said a gentleman who was talking to a boy. 'You say you were born in Ireland.' 'Och, your honor, if that's all,' said the boy, 'small blame to that. Suppose your cat were to have kittens in the oven, would they be loaves of bread?'

THE ALBION.

Established in 1822.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, published every Saturday Morning, in the City of New York, and devoted to News, Politics and General Literature. This old-established and popular Periodical is now supplied to the public at the rate of

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM,

OR SIX CENTS WEEKLY.

The Albion has been widely known for forty years throughout the United States and British North America. Thoroughly independent in tone, it will be found to combine all the elements of Home Journalism, with due attention to every American incident that is likely to bear on British interests.

The Literary Department

will be enriched as heretofore, with the cream of English Literature. In connection with Art the ablest criticism will continue to be published in its columns. To these are added such Editorial Notices of current events as are deemed to be of interest to a circle of intelligent readers, whether British or American. The Albion furnishes, it is believed, a valuable weekly budget of information and entertainment.

THE ALBION ENGRAVINGS.

We have on hand copies of the Albion Engravings and subscribers and others can be furnished with them—at $2 each to subscribers and $3 to non-subscribers. A few proof copies of the Florence Nightingale print on India paper may be had. The following engravings are also on hand:

Chaloner's Queen Victoria, Lurat's Prince Albert, Allan's Sir Walter Scott, Stuart's Washington, Mattison's Benjamin Franklin, Cooe's First Trial by Jury, Buckler's St. Paul's London, Portrait of General Havelock, Herring's Three Members of the Temperance Society, The Castle of India from Stanfield's Pictures, Wanderfield's Mary Queen of Scots, Landseer's Return from Hawking, Landseer's Dignity and Impudence, Landseer's Deer Pass, Dr. Kane at the Graves of Sir John Franklin's Men, Wilkies, Columbus propounding his Theory of a New World, and the Falls of Niagara from an original drawing made for the Albion.

Engravings can be safely forwarded by mail or express, on paste-board roller, at a charge of a few cents.

Money may be transmitted in registered letters at the risk of the office.

Subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces have to pay 26 cents per annum for American Postage.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
TWELFTH VOLUME.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The July number commences the Twelfth Volume of the Atlantic Monthly, and will contain such a list of contents as will entitle it to marked consideration. Nathaniel Hawthorn contributes for the first number of the new volume "Outside glimpses of English Society," one of the most interesting of his admirable English Sketches.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has written for it "The Doings of a Sun-Beam." Robert Dale Owen discusses "The Claims of Labor or Service," and presents some new views for the study of the people of America. Gail Hamilton continues her popular "Gala Days." Professor Agassiz offers another eloquent paper on mountains. And many other articles of equal value with the above, will be included in the forthcoming number.

Begun in 1857, the "Atlantic Monthly" has now reached its sixty-eighth number. Its circulation increasing largely from the start, has given it such a currency throughout the country as no other magazine however acquired. Its faith in immortal liberty as a principle, and its warfare against Despotism in every form, have made it a welcome visitor, far and wide, every month. It does not abate in these our days of trial and battle, one jot of that firm belief in the brighter days to come which Right and Justice are sure always to win, but its future pages will show an increased activity in staking before the midst of the people an unfaltering confidence in the power of the North to limit the existence of a rebellion founded in cruel injustice and oppression.

The prosperity of the Atlantic enables its conductors to employ the most eminent talent of country in its columns. All the best known writers in American literature, contributing constantly to its pages, give in the sole right to be known as our national magazine. Its staff still comprises the following names among its leading contributors:—

James Russell Lowell, Henry W. Longfellow, Louis Agassiz, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorne, C. C. Felton, T. W. Higginson, Author "Margaret Howth," Mrs. Julia W. Howe, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney

WHEN THIS CRUEL WAR IS OVER.

Dearest love, do you remember,
When we last did meet,
How you told me that you loved me,
Kneeling at my feet?
Oh, how proud you stood before me,
In your suit of blue,
When you vowed to me and country
Ever to be true.

Weeping, sad, and lonely,
Absent fears in vain,
When this cruel war is over,
Praying that we'll meet again.

When the summer breeze is sighing,
Mournfully along;
Or when autumn leaves are falling,
Sadly breathes the song.
Oft in dreams I see thee lying
On the battle plain;
Lonely, wounded, even dying,
Calling, but in vain.
Weeping, sad, &c.

If, amid the din of battle,
Nobly you should fall,
Far away from those who love you,
None to hear your call;
Who would whisper words of comfort,
Who would sooth your pain?
Ah! the many cruel fancies
Ever on my brain.
Weeping, sad, &c.

But our country calls, darling,
Angels cheer your way,
While our nation's sons are fighting
We can ever pray.
Nobly strike for God and Union,
Let all nations see
How we love our starry banner,
Emblem of the free.
Weeping, sad, &c.

THE MANTLE OF BEAUTY.

BY S. T. ARTHUR.

'I pity her, she is so plain.'

'Margaret?'

'Yes.'

'Certainly, she is very plain; but then, she is so good.'

'Goodness is very well in its way; but a handsome face and a fine person will do more for a girl than goodness,' was replied.

In a worldly point of view, you mean?'

The first speaker did not answer this remark. It suggested thoughts not wholly in agreement with the sentiments just uttered.

The subject of conversation was the youngest of three sisters. She was called homely by almost every one: yet, it is but fair to say, that she was too often seen as foil to her handsome sisters, whose bright eyes, regular features, rich complexions, and free graceful carriage had won for them the appellation of "the two beauties."

Parents are not always wise and just. The fact of being a father or a mother does not, as a matter of course, lift a person above his or her natural weaknesses and defects of character, or change materially the old estimate of men and things. The mother of the girls was very far from being a wise woman, and quite as far from being just towards her youngest child. The beauty of the two elder sisters she sought to increase by all the available arts of dress; while the very plainness and coarseness of attire which she deemed good enough for Margaret, made the latter seem homelier than she really was. Margaret, not being an ornamental appendage of the household, was made useful. While her sisters dressed and saw company, she was at work, and often at work for them. She felt the unjust discrimination, and often cried over it, when no one saw her, but neither rebelled nor complained.

'I pity her, she is so plain.' This was often said by those who saw Margaret in contrast with her sisters. But it always happened, that those who had any true knowledge in regard to her character, would answer—'But she is so good.'

There is beauty in goodness. That was her compensation. If the outer garment was plain, the inner form and true substance of her being had a symmetry and grace beyond what the flesh put on in its most envied perfection.—And compensation went farther still. The soul is in a perpetual effort to impress a likeness of its quality in the face; to mould the features into an image of itself. If this law was in favor of Margaret, it was against her sisters, for, while she was living in self-denial, and, in a patient possession of her soul, both willing and doing right in every relation, no matter how unpleasant, they were cherishing pride, selfishness, vanity, worldliness, envy and ill nature.

The time came, as years progressed, when it was no longer said, 'I pity her, she is so plain.' Not that any new signs of beauty in her face; but it was no longer perceived as homely. She did not appear in company as frequently as her gay and brilliant sisters, who always had around them a circle of admirers; but when she appeared, she did not sit alone, as once, nor as often from the subject of deprecating comparison.—Persons who had kept aloof from her began to feel an attraction that drew them to her side; and many wondered with themselves how it was that they had been so slow in discovering how greatly she was, in some things, superior to her more showy sisters.

There was a sphere of tranquility about Margaret felt by every one who approached her—The repose of her manner did not break up easily, but to right sentiments and feelings she responded with a warmth of expression that veiled nothing of inelegancy. In conversation where the subject was agreeable, thought would light up her countenance, and play over it in manifold changes. It was singularly mobile to the mind—answering to emotion; never concealing.

Time came when the two elder sisters found themselves often less attractive in company than the homely Margaret. Young men whose favour they desired to win, were not unfrequently indifferent to all their arts and blandisment; and yet, stranger still, as it appeared to them, so interested in Margaret, as to be envelous of attention towards her.

It is not always that truth comes to earn most concerned in bearing it. Friends and neighbors see and talk about our personal defects, peculiarities, and hindering faults, though we see them not, and go on blindly indulging them to our loss and injury. Margaret's two eldest sisters still thought themselves beautiful, winning, graceful beyond all comparison with their Cinderella, as once they had been vain and heartless enough to call her. They did not recognize the fairy work that, with slower than old fairy touches, yet with more enduring magic, was transforming her daily. But there were eyes that could see while theirs were blind, and it happened that, through a sense of hearing, they gained a knowledge of what their sight had failed to give. The eldest—her name was Cordelia—overheard, it matters not as to the place and circumstance, this conversation. It was between two young men with whom she had been long acquainted:

'I used to think her beautiful' said one of them.

'Cordelia?'

'Yes.'

'So did I. Three or four years ago, when she and her sister first came out, with the girlish bloom upon them, I thought them two of the loveliest creatures I had ever seen. But, somehow, they have been fading, or changing ever since.'

'There is nothing in them,' said the first speaker.

'Not much' was answered.

'They dress elegantly, and have a world of sprightly gossip and small talk. But as to the culture of the heart or intellect, I have failed to discover the signs. I was quite smitten with Cordelia at first—actually in love with her bright eyes and blossoming face—but I got bravely over it long ago. Beauty is very well in these love matters, but oughts sensible man to look a little way beneath the surface, to see what kind of a foundation beauty is resting upon. Girls of this class are well enough to dance and flirt with; but for the graver purposes of matrimony, none but knaves or fools accept them.'

'There are knaves and fools about.'

'O, yes, as witness the wretched marriages that are constantly taking place. There's a fellow dancing attendance on Cordelia now, who is just weak enough to marry her as a kind of show wife. He thinks her queenly! Of course if the event comes off there will be another miserable couple added to the list. Both will find themselves disappointed.'

'By the way,' said the other, breaking in upon his friends, homily, 'what do you think of the plainer sister?'

'Margaret?'

'Yes.'

'I've ceased to call her plain.'

'You would hardly call her beatiful.'

'I don't know. I have seen her when to call her beautiful would be no error of language. The fact is, Margaret has puzzled me at times. I grant you that her features are not cut after a classic model; nor is there what we sometimes call 'style' in her face. She hasn't the fine complexion, nor the large liquid eyes of her eldest sister; and yet her countenance is to me far more attractive—it is so full of mind and feeling. You forget, as you talk with her, the material lines of her face, in the beauty of thought that transfigures it. Do you, want a higher style than this?'

'And yet Margaret was very homely. There was a time when I almost wondered at her courage in venturing to brave the comparison that must be made between her and her sisters.'

'Yes, I remember my first impression also. But it gradually wore off as I came to know her.

'The fact is, her beautiful soul shines through its material veil, and you see the light and loveliness within. In the case of her sisters, the order is reversed. They have not I fear, beautiful souls.'

'The mantle they have so long worn in pride,' was answered, is 'dropping away from them, and if they do not see to it, it will fall upon the shoulders of Margaret. If I were choosing a wife from among these three sisters, I shouldn't hesitate a moment.'

'You would take Margaret.'

'Yes.'

'Not regarding mere beauty of as anything when put in contrast with excellence of character.'

'I am a lover of beauty, was replied.—'Whenever the beautiful is presented, I find myself a constrained worshipper. At first, I saw beauty only in form and color; and was in constant danger of accepting gilt and bloom for enduring substance. Twice I have been on the eve of marriage proposal, blinded, fascinated by mere external charms. I shudder, sometimes, when I think of what I escaped on both instances. The beauty lay only on the surface. Gradually my mind became better instructed: I was able to see the difference between real beauty and its fading semblance. So, I am still a worshipper of beauty; but I recognize its higher types. The surface of things has grown transparent to my clearer view.'

'Then in taking Margaret, you still have regard to beauty?'

'Yes; to that beauty which fades not, and which has power to mould even a plain face into a likeness of itself.'

Cordelia heard no more. Though from view, she recognised the speakers voices. Hopes were dashed to the earth which had been fondly cherished. She understood some things which had occasionally puzzled her thought; knew not why it was that certain young men, of high excellence, who so eagerly sought her face for a time, gradually withdrew themselves, and became attentive to what she had considered less attractive girls. There was beauty of which she had not dreamed; a beauty to which she had not attained; a beauty scarcely recognized at first, but growing more and more apparent, and putting forth allurement beside which all that she could offer was but as the glitter of tinsel.

'Your sister is looking well to-night.'

Cordelia started from her painful reverie at the voice of a matronly friend.

'Margaret, you mean,' was her subdued reply. But for the conversation just heard, she would not have thought of the sister.

'Yes. How much she has improved. I hear it remarked on all sides. You must take care, or she will bear off the palm.'

The elder sister turned her face away so that its impression might not be seen.

'She is so good, so true; so full of that spontaneous grace that comes from order and symmetry within. She must have a beautiful soul.'

A year later, and Margaret was the bride of a man who had once stood bewildered and fascinated in the blaze of Cordelia's beauty—of one who had said of her, as many had said—'What a pity she is so plain!' And he was a lover of beauty in all its forms.'

THE STEP-MOTHER.

The word "step-mother" grates harshly on the ear. Step-mothers, as a class, are generally detested, and the possibility of one doing her duty never enters the brain of most persons. I was very forcible struck, a few days ago, in calling on a lady friend of mine who had married a widower. She was the eldest daughter of a widowed mother, and the chief support of her and her youngest sisters, who had one by one, left their mother's humble home and gone to comfortable abodes of their own, until but two remained. Sarah Woodward was sixteen, and Agnes twenty-eight at the time of her marriage.

Agnes Woodward was truly refined, and no one for a moment would hesitate to pronounce her a perfect lady, although before her marriage to Mr. Vernon, the rich widower, she worked from Monday morning until Saturday night at Mr. Wilcox's bookbinlery; she, therefore, had but few advantages.

Many were astonished when Mr. Vernon married her; his friends thought he ought to have chosen one in his own circle. But Mrs. Vernon's unassuming manneres soon won the respect and admiration of her husband's friends.

At the time of Mr. Vernon's marriage with Agnes Woodward, he was the father of two beautiful daughters, Mary and Emma, of the respective ages of eight and ten. Their mother had been dead about four years. From the time of her death they had resided with their grandmother, Mrs. Harper, a proud, fashionable woman, who petted her deceased daughter's children after the most approved manner.

Mrs. Harper was very indignant when Mr. Vernon came to remove his daughters to their paternal mansion. She wept bitterly to think her grand-children should be under the control of a step-mother, and one who, in Mrs. Harper's eyes, was far from possessing any of the attributes of a lady.

On the afternoon I visited Mrs. Vernon I could not but admire the love little Emma Vernon openly showed to her step-mother, and I remarked to Mrs. Vernon, "Your little daughter appears to love you very much."

"Yes, I believe Emma does, and I could not love her more, were she my own child."

I did not doubt she spoke the truth, for the tears of genuine sympathy stood in her eyes, and she drew the little head that rested on her bosom closer to her.

"But," she added, "the first time I ever saw Mr. Vernon's children I was afraid that I was going to prove a step-mother indeed to his daughters. Ah! I shall never forget the day that Mr. Vernon ordered his carriage to be got ready, and drove to Mrs. Harper's for his children, how impatiently I awaited his return. After two hours absense he came, leading his two little daughters by the hand, and said, 'Agnes, you will be a mother to my little girls for my sake.' I told him I should try to be as good a one as I could possibly be. I then kissed Mary, who lovingly returned my embrace; but Emma would not allow me to kiss her. Mr. Vernon exclaimed, 'Come Emma, kiss your new mama, there's a good girl."

"No, I will not kiss her," spoke the little pouting mouth, for she's not my mama. Grandma says my beautiful mama is in heaven."

"I felt the little heart was closed against me. I suppose some women would have told Mr. Vernon to send her to the nursery, but I wept from disappointment, for I thought my husband's child would not have refused my offered love. Mary, who had not yet spoken to me, came and kissed me again, saying, 'Mama, please do not mind what Emma says."

"Emma, when she saw her sister so kind, kissed me also, and burst into tears. It was thus that my husband's children and I became friends; but I do not give myself any credit for winning their love, or even treating them kindly; perhaps if they had treated me differently I should have lost my patience with them, and would have been a severe mother to them; but they were affectionate children. I try to correct their faults, and tell them unless they are obedient and good, God will not love them. Besides, would I not be the most ungrateful of human beings if I did not be kind to them? For Mr. Vernon has been father and husband to me and my family; he has sent my sister Sarah to a good boarding-school, and my dear mother has found a home to spend her old age in with me."

I took my departure from Mrs. Vernon's with the conviction there were some step-mothers who supplied the place of the lost wife and mother with the same loving care and tenderness.

Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir and Henry's Vermont Liniment and Pain Killer are medicines which stand before the public purely on their own merits. The people are not asked to believe the opinion of others in regard to their efficacy in effecting cures, but are simply asked to try them for themselves, and if they do not prove to be worth the small pittance asked for them, you have only to return them to the agent of whom you bought them and get back your money. They are warranted for Coughs, Colds, Rheumatism, &c., when used as directed. Price only 25 cts.

CHEERFULNESS.

'What are you singing for?' said I to Mary Maloney.

'Oh! I don't know, ma'am, without my heart feels happy.'

'Happy are you, Mary Maloney? Let me see; you don't own a foot of land in the world.'

'Foot of land, is it, she cried, with a hearty Irish laugh. 'Oh! what a land ye be after joking! why, I haven't a penny, let alone the land.'

'Your mother is dead?'

'God rest her soul,' replied Mary Maloney, with a touch of genuine Irish pathos. 'May the angels make her bed in heaven!'

'Your brother is still a hard case,' I suppose.

'Ah!' you may well say that. It's nothing but drink, drink, and beating his poor wife, that she is, poor creature!'

'You have to pay your sisters board?'

'Sure, the creature, and she's a good little girl is Hinny, and willing to do whatever I axes her; I don't grudge the money what goes for that.'

'You haven't many fashionable dresses either, Mary Maloney?'

'Fashionable, is it? Oh! yes, I put a piece of whalebone in my shirt, and me collar goes looks as big as the great ladies. But then you say, I haven't but two gowns to my back, two shoes to my feet, one bonnet to my head, barring the cold hood ye gave me.'

'You haven't any lover, Mary?'

'Oh! be off wid ye! Ketch Mary Maloney getting a lover these days, when the hard times is come. No, no, I'm thankful I ain't got that to trouble me yet, nor I don't want it.'

'What on earth have you got to make you happy? A drunken brother, a poor helpless sister, no mother, no father, no lover—why where do you get all your happiness from?'

'The Lord be praised, Miss, it growed with me. Give me a bit of sunshine, a clean flue, plenty of work, and a sup at the right time, and I'm made. That makes me laugh and sing. And then, if deep trouble comes why, God helpin' me, I'll try and keep me heart up. Sure it would be a sad thing if Patrick McGuire should take it into his head to axe me, but the Lord willin', I'd try to bear up under it.'

The last speech upset my gravity. The idea of looking upon a lover as an affliction was so droll. But she was evidently sincere, having the example of her sister's husband and drunken brother.

"NOT IN VAIN."

'My first sermon,' said a pastor, 'what a vivid recollection I have of it!' A ministerial acquaintance who was to spend the Sabbath from home on exchange, had invited me to ride with him to his appointment. On arriving he said:

'I shall depend on you to preach half the day'

The afternoon was left for me to improve. There was a heavy rain and few ventured out, for which I felt more and more thankful as the services advanced. My discourse partly written and partly extempore, sounded to my own ears like the 'foolishness of preaching' indeed, and with an inward resolution never again to commit the folly of speaking from the sacred desk, I went home mortified, humbled, and desponding.

Some years afterwards, while settled over a church in Connecticut, an acute billious attack laid me by for a few weeks from the labors of a pastorate. One day when lying dejected on the sick bed, a stranger visited me. He was also a pastor, residing some twelve miles away. After some pleasant preliminary words, he said:—

'I have come on an errand to you. It is a message entrusted to me by a dying woman. Do you remember spending a Sabbath in H——, some years ago, in company with Rev. Mr. F——?'

'I do,' said I, while a quick flush passed over my face.

'Do you recollect what a great rain there was, and how thin the attendance?'

'I could not forget it if I would.'

'Well,' said he, 'I was pastor of that church then—we did not meet, however. Two years after you were there, I was sent for to converse with a lady about to die. She was ready for the messenger. 'But,' said she, 'I have a special request to make of you; then referring to your sermon, at that time, as being wonderfully blest to her, she added, 'I fear he went away discouraged—supposing he had done no good—and I want you to tell him how God sent home that discourse to my soul, that he may know that his labour was not in vain in the Lord.' And,' continued my thoughtful caller, 'hearing you were sick, and fearing you might feel low-spirited in being unable to discharge your accustomed duties, I felt it my duty to ride over and deliver my message now, hoping it would cheer you in your affliction.'

'My word shall not return unto me void' says Jehovah. In a world of clearer light you shall reap in joy!

THE COTTON SUPPLY.—The Times analyses some returns, which show the imports for the half-year to June 13th. The total imports were 2,134,775 cwt. The American imports have decreased to the almost incredible amount of 647,[illegible] cwts. The world has therefore upwards of 2,000,000 cwt. to supply; and of these India furnishes 1,204,763; and Brazil and Egypt between them, 585,792. It results that our miscellaneous supplies amount in the aggregate to 357,273. At this minute we import raw cotton from sixty-six different quarters, and yet, after all, our gross supply is scarcely swelled by this multitude of contributions. It is still upon one or two chief sources that we depend. If anything were to interfere with India or Egyptian exports, we should have another fall OPPOSITION.

The Opposition seem determined to do their utmost to thwart and annoy the Government. The Ministry, fully impressed with the importance of carrying out the different measures submitted by it to the House, is extremely anxious that no time should be wasted in tom-foolery or idle talk. The Opposition, however, apparently think otherwise; when, therefore, they find that they have been defeated in one non-confidence motion, they go right away to concoct another even when they are sure that the only end accomplished will be the obstruction of the public business, and the entailment of large additional expenses upon the country. This conduct of the Opposition cannot, we are sure, be looked upon by the people generally with anything but feelings of the strongest disapprobation. They cannot fail asking themselves what good is likely, can possibly result from these continual non-confidence motions, which are evidently prompted by the worst of motives, and supported by the weakest reasons. Were the Ministry defeated upon a question in which some great principle was at issue, it would be quite another matter; then opposition would be legitimate—could only be expected; but when the Ministry is straining all its energies to benefit the country—to improve its internal relations—to redeem it from the (to it) gigantic debt into which the miserie of previous administrations has plunged it, and to improve its credit abroad—we think it is justly entitled to the sympathy and co-operation of every man who is not dead to every principle of honor, and not stone-blind through party passion or prejudices to every perception of right.—There are certain things in which all, however widely they may differ upon general political and other questions, should feel and exhibit a common interest. Among these we think may unquestionably be enumerated the objects just stated, as contemplated by the Ministry. Love of country should rise superior to claims of faction; but so it is not. The Opposition can see nothing but defects and faults in the Government; they will give it credit for no virtues, or qualities exciting commendation. Hence, every measure of the Ministry, however imperatively demanded by existent exigencies and requirements, or however excellent and devoid of imperfection in itself, the moment it is introduced is assailed with the grossest abuse, and denounced as charged with ruin and destruction to those very interests which it professedly aims at conserving and advancing. In fact, the abstract merits of the measure are not at all considered. To know that it emanates from those in power is quite enough to those out of power, to make them level their batteries and fire away. We think the truth of this statement will be admitted by all who have kept themselves posted in the doings of the present Legislature. It is lamentable to think of the time and money absolutely wasted by the pernicious course so persistently pursued by the Opposition. We again say, we think that the people have a right to have an answer to their question, what good is likely, can possibly result from such factious conduct? An answer, we hold, to this question should be insisted upon, by his constituents, from every member who has been accessory to, or implicated in, this factious conduct which now does and has during the whole session characterized the present Opposition. If he can give good reasons for the course he has pursued, all right; but if cannot, he can perhaps be taught a lesson which may be a warning to those who forget their promises and betray the confidence reposed in them. The present Government may not be perfect—we believe it is not, in many respects—but it is infinitely superior to the Cartier-McDonald Government that preceded it. And the question is:—Shall the present Administration or the Cartier-McDonald clique hold the reins of power? This is the point at issue. Every opponent, therefore, of the Administration, must, under the circumstances, prefer the latter—from whose misrule again good Heaven deliver us.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamer American bring the latest news. Nothing new of great importance. The British Government is about sending a couple of regiments to China, in consequence of the difficulties with Japan. The Parliament was further prorogued to Dec. 1st. The Times says that one of the "rams" will make its trial trip in a few days. It is reported that the Florida was sold at Brest, and that a new vessel waited the crew at Florida. The London Times strongly urged the detention of the rams until it is proved that they are not for the Confederates, stating that, "we would not submit if we were belligerents to the despatch of cruiser after cruiser from a neutral port to make war upon our vessels." The Times, also, has an editorial on Canada, to the effect that she could no more exist, as an independent nation by the side of the United States than a lamb by the side of a wolf. She has to choose between union with us and annexation to the United States, and it says by the choice they make we abide. The Times then puts the question to Canadians, who, it says, have shown an unwillingness to raise a reasonable force to resist invasion, which course will they choose, to fight freely for the defence of their homes or be dragged at the cannon's mouth to feed an allied struggle in the heart of a distant, foreign and unhealthy country. The French Government had received the Russian letter, which is reported as being of a conciliatory nature. Austria has assured the French Government that it may depend upon its co-operation in the Polish question, even to hostilities with Russia. Affairs in Poland remain in statu quo. The young King of Greece intends visiting the Czar. The Confederate loan was at 25 per cent. discount. Crops are reported as being above average. Breadstuffs are, in consequence, lower.

MR. SIMPSON.

Mr. Simpson is the member for the small borough of Niagara. Mr. Simpson makes great pretensions to financial abilities. We are afraid if his antecedents were carefully examined into, that he has only the pretensions, and nothing else. Mr. Simpson during the few years previous to his entering Parliament, was connected with several societies, as far as they themselves are concerned. He was, it is true, very ready to receive money, but the aforesaid members thought he was very chary in paying money out, and we consequently find Mr. Simpson as a financial character, in not quite as good odor among them as he might be. Mr. Simpson engaged in several schemes of making money, but his schemes were only first-rate in making him loose his own money, and the money of those who were so unfortunate as to be connected with him. Mr. Simpson, therefore, was looked upon, justly or unjustly, we do not presume to say, as a visionary; our opinion, however, is that Mr. Simpson is good in "scheming," but poor at "practicalizing." Mr. Simpson was elected to support the Macdonald-Cartier government, and faithfully did he discharge that duty. He always voted with them—apparently asking no questions. In this, however, he was not so much to blame—he only did what he was sent by his constituents to do. When, however, the Cartier-Macdonald Government was ousted, Mr. Simpson came out in a new character. Mr. Simpson apparently cloaked himself in the mantle of the defunct Joseph Hume. He bewailed the extravagance of the late Government, and exhibited his quondum friends in no very flattering light. It is said he was bidding for the Receiver-Generalship. This may be calumny or it may not. At any rate he did not get the Receiver-Generalship, and lately we find that he has completely changed his tune, and now anxiously defends those he formerly exposed. Quite a change has come over the "spirit of his dream." His ingenuity—and Mr. Simpson has considerable ingenuity—is now only exerted to "undo" the evil which in his opinion he a few months ago did. However clever—Mr. Simpson makes errors sometimes, for he now discovers that the public debt of the country is some 20 or 30 millions less than it was when he made his famous speech, which the friendly press did him the kindness of so widely circulating. Mr. Simpson has ideas of his own about calculation. For instance, in a late speech denouncing the financial policy of the present Government, he said:—

"There were certain heads of expenditure over which no Government has any control, but there were a very large number of leading items left, by which to judge, such as Legislation, Administration of Justice, Militia, Agricultural Societies, Emigration, Public Works and Buildings, Roads and Bridges, Light Houses, Excise, Post Office, Ocean Service, Territorial, etc. What were the facts? Why, the corrupt Government, the profligate Government, the most wicked Government that ever existed, according to the language of hon. gentlemen opposite, had in 1861 expended upon these items $5,284,211. But what had the Liberal Government proposed to expend in 1863? Why, no less than $5,336,100. So their proposition was $47,889 greater than the profligate Government of 1861 expended."

On this the Quebec Mercury pithily comments:

"The only drawback to such ingenuity as this is its impudence. Take, for instance, the item of militia, which Mr. Simpson ventures to include in his enmiration. In 1861, the expenditure under this head was $34,687; in 1863, it is estimated at $613,600. We pre-sume that neither Mr. Simpson nor the members who cry "hear, hear" to his absurd assertions will oppose the increase as "profligate" or unnecessary. If not, this item exhibits an increase of $558,813 as between the two years; and deducting from this sum the $47,889 which he alleges to to be the increase on the aggregate of items, it is apparent that a reduction has been effected amounting to $480,924.

We give this as a "specimen brick" of the original edifice built by the member for Niagara on Tuesday afternoon. Whether, in the judgment of his party, the effort establishes his title to the Department of Finance, when Mr. Galt shall surrender his pretensions to it, we are not at present permitted to know. The ungenerous public, we apprehend, will consider that the performance proves him to be a charlatan rather than a financier."

IMPROVEMENTS.

Hardly any, (if any) Town in the Province exhibits so many substantial signs of progress and improvement as Peterborough. Go a-head seems to be the order of the day. Building after building is going up in every direction. In the main street, Messrs. Nichols & Hall, Coulter & Stevenson, Robinson & Williamson, Hopkins & Cox, and Cluxton & Stevenson have erected, or erecting fine buildings. Even in the side streets, Progress is on the march. Mr. Sheriff Hall on Hunter Street, and Mr. Bradburn on Simcoe Street have erected buildings, which, when finished, would be ornaments to the main street—even of a more pretentious place than Peterborough. We understand that both the Commercial and Toronto Banks intend erecting fine edifices. Indeed, the former is how fast under headway. The work on the Court House Hill has been re-commenced; and we sincerely hope, that both the Town and County Council will be liberal enough to see that the improvement contemplated is not left half completed for want of a little more assistance. A thing ought to be well done or not at all. The old Church Yard has been subsisting to certain changes, which, we think, will add to its appearance, as well as otherwise improve it. A new Lock-up and Engine House is being erected by the Town next Hopkins' block, and opposite Messrs. Nichols & Hall's store. Many improvements have been made in the side-walks; but the inspector might, by close inspection, we opine, find a few more days work in this branch of his business. Many streets are likewise being graded, thus adding much to the appearance and regularity of the Town, and as well as to the comforts of teamsters.

Nor in Ashburnham are the people at a stand still. A fine new School building is now nearly finished. It reflects much credit upon our neighbors across the "river." Mr. Calcutt is, also, finishing a fine, large, stone Brewery, the engine of which has been supplied and "set up" by our old friend, Malcom, whose mechanical skill and ingenuity are too well known to need any praise from us. When we get the new Town Hall—well—we'll let the people know.

ST. HYACINTHE.

Mr. Raymond, Opposition, has been elected by a majority of 350 over Mr. Papineau.

RAILROAD.

We believe that most of our readers know that some time ago arrangements were entered into by the Town Council with the "owners" of the Peterborough and Port Hope Railway, by which the difficulties hitherto existing between them were to be made "all right." This Town knocked off £10,000 of the debt due it (with nearly as large an amount of unpaid interest) on condition that it should be paid £20,000; that additional security be given for the payment of that sum, and that it should be further secured from all present and future litigation. A Bill with this end in view was to be prepared and got through the Legislature. It seems that a certain "Parliamentary Agent," in this place was the party selected to pilot the Bill through. The late Council appointed him, and the present endorsed the appointment. It seems, however, that our P. A. had two masters to serve—Mr. Covert and the Town Council. We all know how hard it is for one to serve two masters; for the Good Book tells us he will hate the one and serve the other. So it seems with our "Parliamentary Agent." The Town Council thought our P. A. was attending to their interests, but the other day they realized quite a different state of things. A Bill was sent to the Mayor—not from our "Parliamentary Agent,"—but from a member of the Upper House, who, in a letter to him, asked if the bill met the with the approval of the people of Peterborough, stating that if it did, they were, in his opinion, rather obtuse to their own interests. The Bill had passed the Upper House, and purported to have the sanction of the Town Council. This, however, was not the case. The Bill was not the same at all as that to which the Council had agreed. It seems that the original Bill underwent quite a "doctoring" down at "Quebec." In its amended (!) form it was sent by our "Parliamentary Agent" not to the Mayor—not, to the Town Council—not even to the Railway Committee—but to several gentlemen in Town, members of the Council, it is true, but with no more right to act than anybody else, who, we believe, without the knowledge or sanction of the Town Council, told our "Parliamentary Agent" to go a-head. So, go a-head he went. But the Council—or rather the majority of them—when by chance they saw the Bill, took quite another view. In their opinion, the Bill was quite a different thing from the original one. They found that, while it reduced the claim due by the Railway Company to the £20,000 agreed upon, it did not give any additional security, and expressly stipulated that the conditions of the Bill should not in any way interfere with present or future suits against the town. That the Bill contained very objectionable features, will at once be seen, when it is stated that a petition was immediately sent off signed by the Mayor and the majority of the Council, opposing the Bill and requesting that no further action should be taken upon it with regard to making it law until it should be submitted to the Ratepayers for their approval or disapproval, as the case might be. To say the least of it, there is something very "queer" and "singular" about the matter, which, we think, ought to be explained by those implicated. Our columns are open for explanations.

AMERICAN NEWS.

The defeat of Rosecrans by Bragg seems to have been a more serious affair than at first anticipated. The battle opened at 11 a. m.; and the tide seems to have turned in various ways before night set in. General Thomas, on the Federal side, had apparently to bear the brunt of the fight; the Confederates were led by Generals Hill and Polk. The Federal loss at the close of the day (Saturday) was 600 killed and 2,000 wounded. Nothing is said of the loss in prisoners. The Federals up to this time do not seem to have lost much ground; but they were perfectly aware from the temper displayed by Confederates, and the confidence with which they made their successive assaults, on Saturday that the real battle was yet to come, and that on so many fatal Sabbaths before, it was most probable the enemy had reserved his most destructive charge for the sacred day. These surmises were realized. Bragg began his assault on General Thomas's left at 9 o'clock in the morning; and before noon the Federal centre was broken, and evidently compelled to fall back in disorder. At one o'clock General Granger was brought up to General Thomas's assistance, and the Federal Troops again rallied, and, no doubt, made a sturdy resistence up to five o'clock; but nothing was ultimately left to Rosecrans but retreat; and fortunate for him it was that this was still open to him. Under cover of night he found it possible to get back to Chattanoga, the enemy probably being too much exhausted to improve the occasion by pursuit.

The Federal loss is calculated at 10,000 men, killed, wounded and prisoners, with some fifty pieces of artillery. The Confederate loss was also very heavy.

Burnside, no doubt, by this time, has joined Rosecrans, when, we presume, the Federals will assume the offensive, and try to retrieve their tarnished reputation.

It is said that Texas has been re-occupied by the Federal forces.

Gilmore is sanguine of success as regards the final taking of Charleston.

MR. RANKIN.

We see that the Speaker has declared the recognizance of Mr. O'Connor insufficient. It seems he got one O'Dowd of Quebec as surety, who said he was worth $1600 over and above his liabilities. A scrutiny being instituted, it was found the value of his estate was only $1300. The law fixing the surety at $1600, no alternative was left the Speaker but to throw out O'Connor's petition. Mr. Rankin is therefore the only legal claimant to the seat for Essex. He no doubt has the best right; and we are glad that the trickeries employed to cheat him out of this right, have proved fruitless. He will no doubt at once be declared the member for Essex when the Committee meet.

Case of Mr. Belshaw.—Mr. Belshaw, the British subject who was treated with so much barbarity by the Confederates, because, being conscripted at Montgomery, Ala., he refused to serve in the army, has addressed a letter to Earl Russel on the subject. He simply states the circumstances under which he came to be in Alabama, and concludes by asking his Lordship to demand indemnification on his behalf for the loss and sufferings he has undergone. If the Federals had done this, what noise it would have created among many of the papers that have not even noticed Mr. Belshaw's case. We hope such an outrage will not be allowed to pass unchuked.

HAMILTON.

Mr. Buchanan is the member for the City of Hamilton. He is a very eccentric individual. He pretends to be strongly reform in his principles, but invariably votes and sides with the corruptionists. Now this Mr. Buchanan has declared that the interests of Hamilton are his politics; and because the present Government has too much honesty — too much regard for right—to endorse a scheme which he has for relieving Hamilton of the debt which it has in past years incurred, and which it ought therefore honestly pay, he votes on every occasion with those who are in the opposition; and who, he thinks, if in power, would be more pliable — would be more ready, for the sake of his vote and influence, to assist him in the plan which he is trying to carry out. The Corporation of Hamilton has for several years failed to pay even the interest upon the money borrowed, which, we believe, was secured by Great Western Railway Stock. The Stock has yielded good dividends; and why the city should not pay its just interest, is more than we can conceive. The scheme of Mr. Buchanan, which he has embodied in a Bill, is to defer the payment of the amount due by the City for thirty years, allowing the creditors three per cent. per annum for the first ten years, four per cent. for the second ten years, and five per cent for the last ten years. Any one, on the slightest reflection, or with the weakest perceptions of justice, must at once see how objectionable is the Bill. The idea of a municipality being allowed to repudiate its obligations, should not for a moment be entertained. To allow Hamilton to do so, would be to establish a precedent fraught with the worst consequences to Canada. It would altogether prevent capitalists from investing their money in a country where those who had entered into solemn engagements could, by the action of the Legislature of the land, be permitted to set these engagements at defiance — thus repudiating their just debts, or keeping their creditors out of their money indefinitely. It is true that the Hamiltonians aver that the majority of the creditors have given consent to the scheme proposed for the settlement of the City's complicated difficulties. This, however, amounts to nothing. Necessity—not choice—must have been the prompting motive of such compliance. It is the principle at stake, the precedent that would be established, that should be looked at and considered. Besides, some of the creditors may not be in a position to consent. Their all may be invested in Hamilton; and whether or not Hamilton be compelled to pay its just debts, may be life or death to them. They may have nothing else upon which to depend. We are prepared, as the Montreal Witness pointedly remarks, to make allowances for the commercial distress which injured the trade of Hamilton, as it did that of most other cities in Western Canada; but could not the Corporation have provided for the interest of its Municipal debt from the dividend on railway stock, and if necessary by the sale of that stock? A Municipality had better bring itself to poverty, than inflict a wrong upon its creditors.—If the city could not now pay the principal, arrangements for an extension of time could doubtless be made with individual creditors, without compelling all to submit to terms which may prove a serious injury to some. There is another reason why a young and growing city should honorably meet its liabilities, and keep its name untarnished. A Corporation, unlike an individual, never dies, and therefore there is a probability that, with economy and a little denial, it will sooner or later be able to meet its engagements.

Another reason why we think the Legislature should not sanction this scheme is, that other indepted municipalities may follow the example, and Canada attain in Europe the unenviable notoriety which clings to the State of Mississippi. And the danger of the example being followed, is increased from the fact of the scheme meeting with the approval of some upright and honorable men, most persons, forgetting that men will often sanction, in their corporate capacity, transactions which they would never think of doing as individuals. With our present light upon this measure, we cannot but regard it as a great wrong, and trust it will never meet the sanction of Parliament. If we have not understood the matter, or given an unfair view of the position of Hamilton, we shall be glad to be set right upon it.

PROVINCIAL FAIR.

The Late Fair at Kingston was not equal to its predecessors, in many respects. The people of the Western part of the Province seem to have taken but very little interest in the matter. The Kingstonians appear to have done all in their power to make things agreeable and the Fair successful. The weather was however, unfavorable. The next Fair will be held in Hamilton. The following gentlemen were elected as officers for the ensuing year:—

"Mr. Johnson, of London, President; Mr. Rykert, of St. Catherines, first Vice-President; Mr. McGillivray, Glengarry, second Vice-President; Mr. R. L. Denison, re-elected Treasurer."

As far as we could see by hastily running over the lists, few if any, of the exhibitors were from our own County. This is hardly as it should be. We should keep up with the "times."

NEW REMEDY for HYDROPHOBIA.

A French paper noticed a new remedy for hydrophobia—simply hot water. A German veterinary surgeon of Magdeburg, named Hildebrand, has ascertained that hot water has the effect of decomposing the virus, and if applied in time, renders cauterization unnecessary. He says, that all that has to be done after well bathing the part, is to apply a solution of caustic potass to the wound with a brush, and afterwards anoint it with antimony ointment.

CROPS.

The wheat crop, from all accounts, seems to be turning out this year rather better than average. Fall wheat on the whole has turned out better than the Spring wheat. Farmers and merchant may expect good times this Fall. We hope they "won't" forget the printer.

BRITISH AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

We have, this month, hitherto, inadvertently, neglected to notice this excellent monthly. The September number is a good one, and replete with most interesting and useful matter. To particularize, when all the articles are capital, would be invidious. It is well worthy the support of those who can appreciate good, sound, literature. It is infinitely superior to the trashy stuff that floods us from Brother Jonathan's country. Send in your names.

Smith, Harvey, Ennismore and North Douro Agricultural Show.

The Township Show at Lakefield, on Tuesday last was a complete success. Over 250 entries were made. The farm produce was excellent. The live stock was shown in a vacant lot belonging to Mr. Wait, in which had been erected suitable pens and enclosures. The other articles were exhibited in the large room used by the Volunteers as a drill room. The Butter and Cheese were first rate, and reflected the highest credit upon the fair makers.

Some fruit shown by Messrs. Em. Mann and George Fitzgerald, presented a most luscious appearance, and were praised highly.

We observed some very fine earthenware from Mr. Brownscombe's manufactory in this place—which was much admired for its finish.

Mr. John Kennedy, Blacksmith of this place, had on exhibition, some splendid horse shoes. There were three different samples—all of which were specimens of most splendid workmanship, models in form and finish. They excited the warmest encomiums from those best able to judge of their merits. We believe they were highly praised at the Provincial Fair, and would have received a prize if one had been given for such articles.

The following is the list of premiums awarded:—

HORSES.

Team Horses.—1st Jas. Davidson, 2nd J. B. Fowler, 3rd T. E. Fitzgerald.

Carriage Horses.—1st Jonathan Stephenson, 2nd T. E. Fitzgerald, 3rd John Hall.

Single Buggy in Harness.—1st I. Garbutt, 2nd R. Wait, 3rd John B. Fowler.

Brood Mare and Foal.—1st Nich. Walton, 2nd Alex. Rosebore, 3rd John Paul.

Two Year Old Colt.—1st John B. Fowler, 2nd James Brown, 3rd John Robinson.

Year Old Colt.—Nich. Walton, 2nd John Archer, 3rd Robt. Johnston.

CATTLE.

Aged Bull.—1st Wm. Finlay, 2nd Lewis Davis, 3rd M. Galvin.

Two Year Old Bull.—1st Jas. Davidson, 2nd Thomas Mann, 3rd Steele.

Year Old Bull.—2nd Wm. Gill.

Bull Calf of 1863.—1st Sam. McKibbon, 2nd Chris. Quinn.

Milch Cow.—1st J. Garbutt, 2nd Wm. Gill, 3rd John Sherin.

Two Year Old Heifer.—1st Jas. Davidson, 2nd Mich. Steele, 3rd John Garbutt.

One Year Heifer.—1st Sam. McKibbon, 2nd W. J. McKibbon, 3rd Nicholas Steele.

Heifer Calf of 1863.—1st J. Garbutt, 2nd Chris. Quinn.

Yoke of Oxen, any breed.—W. J. McKibbon, 2nd Wm. Trenam, 3rd Geo. Johnston.

SHEEP.

Aged Ram.—1st E. Mann, 2nd Adam Hall, 3rd John Robinson.

Shearling Ram.—1st Lewis Davis, 2nd Adam Hall.

Tup Lamb.—1st Aaron Lamb, 2nd Isaac Watson, 3rd Adam Hall.

Two Aged Ewes.—1st Isaac Watson, 2nd Lewis Davis, 3rd Adam Hall.

Two Shearling Ewes.—Aaron Mann, 2nd Adam Hall, 3rd Lewis Davis.

Two Ewe Lambs.—1st Isaac Watson, 2nd Adam Hall, 3rd John Garbutt.

PIGS.

Best Boar, not over 9 months old.—Ger. Fitzgerald, 2nd John Robinson, 3rd Wm. Gill.

Breeding Sow, not over 9 months old.—1st James Mann, 2nd John Robinson, 3rd Wm. Gill.

GRAIN.

Two Bushels Winter Wheat.—1st Samuel McKibbon, 2nd E. Mann, 3rd S. Manning.

Two Bushels small Field Pease.—1st I. Watson, 2nd Jos. Trenam, 3rd Alex. Rosebery.

Two Bushels Oats.—1st Wm. C. Taylor, 2nd Jas. Davidson, 3rd Sam. Manning.

Two Bushels Barley.—Wm. C. Taylor, 2nd Isaac Garbutt, 3rd Sam. Manning.

Two Bushels Timothy Seed.—1st Samuel McKibbon, 2nd W. C. Taylor, 3rd worthy but not quantity.

POTATOES.

Two Bushels Potatoes.—1st Jos. Fitzgerald, 2nd Aaron Mann, 3rd James Trenam.

BUTTER.

Firkin Butter, not less than 50 lbs.—1st Jno. Robinson, 2nd Aaron Mann, 3rd James Mann.

12 lbs. Butter, table use.—1st Wm. Trenam, 2nd Aaron Mann, 3rd I. Garbutt.

CHEESE.

Not less than 10 lbs.—1. Garbutt, 2nd L. Davis, 3rd Sam. Manning.

VARIETY OF VEGETABLES.

12 Beets.—1st John W. Moore, 2nd Thos. Fitzgerald.

Best Set double Harness.—1st Thos. Fitz. Shoemakers Work.—2nd A. P. Sautry.

POULTRY.

Pair of Geese.—1st Lewis Davis, 2nd J. Shearen.

Pair of Turkey.—1st W. C. Taylor, 2nd Sam. Nelson.

Farm Yard Fowls.—1st W. C. Taylor, 2nd John Shearer.

A selection of Earthenware shown by Mr. Brownscomb, worthy of notice. Also.—Horse Shoes shown by Mr. John Kennedy, of Peterborough and David Smith of Lakefield. A number of Citrons shown by Mr. Moore of Smith and Mr. Wm. Gill of Lakefield worthy of notice.

The Great English Harvest.—Two-thirds of the English harvest, says the London Spectator, have been got in, and it is by far the most splendid on record, both in quantity and quality. Instead of imparting this year much more wheat than we produce, as we usually do, we shall certainly produce much more than we import. The wheat yield of an average year on average land may be reckoned at 4¼ quarters an acre, of which the odd fraction is usually "tail wheat." This year even the light land will yield 5¼ quarters, and the heavy 6½, while the "tail wheat" therein included is exceedingly inconsiderable, if worth mentioning at all. The average weight of a bushel has been usually supposed to be 61½lb, but this year it will be at least 67lb. The whole crop will not be less than 8,000,000 quarters, instead of 6,500,000, which is perhaps an average yield. The barley crop is nearly as good as the magnificent crop of last year. The oats are as fine as the wheat, weighing 42lb a bushel, instead of about 36lb, as in average years. The beans are rather deficient, though on some Essex land they yield six quarters to the acre. The potatoes are universally quite free from disease, and very good, though somewhat small. In Scotland, the harvest will not be a full average one: in Ireland, perhaps, at best, only an average; but on the whole we could never say with more literal truth, "Thou crownest the year with thy goodness, and Thy paths drop fatness."

ITEMS.

.....Mr. John Capling, of Easthope, was struck by lightning last week.

.....Gold is said to have been found in Lennox and Addington. If so, we have an El Dorado at our doors.

.....A man was shot at a Charivari party lately near St. Catherines. Charivaris ought to be abolished.

.....On Monday last, a man was run over near Toronto. He was very much injured. Cause, liquor.

.....The house of Mr. James Armstrong, of Millbrook, was destroyed by fire a few days ago.

.....A rebel cruiser has been permitted to enter the harbour of Brest for repairs and refitting.

.....The New York Sun estimates the cost of the Conscription in that city at $11,000,000, yet only 1,000 men will be got. Expensive work.

.....Sir Henry Holland, M. D., Physician in ordinary to Her Majesty, is stopping at the Astor House, New York.

.....The body of a man was found in the Don at Toronto a few days ago. It was recognized as that of Mr. John Blair, who has been missing for some days.

.....On Thursday last, Mr. George Gladman, of Port Hope, while walking nearly in front of his own house, was run over by the cars and killed.

.....Last Sunday, a number of boys left Port Dalhousie for a sail on Lake Ontario, when a high wind wafted them to the New York side of the Lake.

.....The American papers say that this is a year of great abundance in the Great West. The West will produce [illegible] millions of pounds. Beef, Butter and Grain are to be had in immense amounts.

.....Edwin Norse, Superintendent of the Maine Central Railroad, has been detected in a large embezzlement of the Company's funds and has absconded to Canada. Railway men are going it rather strong.

.....By the means of a wire of magnesium, a light for photographic purposes can be obtained, which is only thirteen times less intense than sunlight. With this light, photographs can be taken by night, or in coves or mines.

.....It is estimated the conscripts will cost the Federal Government between four and five thousand dollars apiece. The same amount would have procured, as volunteers, five times the number of men.

.....The number of prize vessels taken into the port of Philadelphia since the commencement of the war is eighty-five. The most valuable including the cargo, was the steamer Bermuda, which realized more than half a million of dollars.

.....It was reported last week, that Mr. M. Symons, freight agent of the Grand Trunk, at Port Levi, skedaddled with $130,000. It turns out that he did skedaddle, but that he was only able to "grab" some five or six thousand dollars.

.....Whilst the Emperor of Brazil was witnessing the exercise of artillery in the fortress of San Jao, a 24-pounder gun burst, killing and wounding several of the staff; but, although the Emperor was not more than a yard from the gun when it exploded, he escaped unhurt.

.....Unceasing preparations to resist hostile aggression continue to be made in the Gulf of Finland. Sweaborg has now a garrison of 4,000 men, amply supplyed with stores and provisions, and 12,000 men have been thrown into Helsingfors.

.....We see that Mr. Pirie, late reporter of the Globe, was presented, by his friends in Toronto, with a testimonial on his leaving that city to join the corps of the Chicago Times. The testimonial consisted of a beautiful portmonaie, with a considerable sum of gold in it.

.....Garibaldi, says a recent correspondent, has recovered from his wound, and takes every day a ride on horseback, on a lady's saddle, not to hurt his foot, which is yet very tender. He can now walk without crutches, with the aid of a simple stick, and delighting in boating, he plies the oar with the vigor of youth.

.....The Volunteer Movement, based upon the model of the corps formed in England, is daily becoming more and more popular in Sweden, and the requisite steps have been taken to train the men as efficient soldiers for the defence of the country in the event of the army being called out on foreign service.

.....The Government of Sweden has somewhat unexpectedly abolished the entire dues on exportation on and after the 1st of January next. The alterations of the import duties have worked successfully, and the commercial transactions of Sweden are being rapidly extended.

.....Over 100 candidates for entrance have gone up to the matriculation examination of the University of Toronto, which began last Tuesday. Of whom 48 propose to pursue their studies in the Faculty of Arts, 29 in that of Medicine, and about 48 in Law.

.....The recently published returns of the imports and exports of New York, indicate a prosperous state of trade. The imports this year, thus far, are only $168,679 in advance of last year, while the exports of produce and manufactured goods have increased to the amount of $26,474,544. The specie exports have decreased from $12,874,000 to $31,002,000.

.....A company of English capitalists have solicited from the Russian government the concession of a railroad from Moscow to Sebastopol. They demand the full and entire enjoyment of the revenue for one hundred years, leaving to the government the option of redemption after fifty years. The government, is, moreover, to guarantee the company a revenue of six per cent. during the period of the concession and construction of the line.

.....The Sultan has peremptorily refused to pay the pressing debts of the ex-Sultanas and the daughters of the late Sultan. His sister, the wife of Mehemet Ali, petitioned for a sum of £70,000 to pay her liabilities, and the same answer has been returned as to the others—that they must sell their jewels and their property, but that not a piastre will be given from the public coffers in addition to the liberal allowance which they receive.

.....The New York Independent strongly advocates an increase to the President's salary. It is preposterously small under existent circumstances. It was fixed, in the beginning of the Government, and has not yet been altered. $25,000 at the present time, when things have doubled and even quadrupled, will go but little way to meet the expenses to which the President must necessarily be put.

Strange Doings in a Scottish Presbyterian Synod.

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church met in Glasgow in May last. The greatest confusion and separation of a minority of ministers and elders, respectable on account of their numbers, talent and piety from the majority, gave rise to the following outrageous and disgraceful scenes:—

The Moderator, in the midst of profound silence, intimated that Mr. Kay's motion had been carried, on which

The Rev. Dr. Wm. B. Anderson (the talented leader of the protesters) rose to speak, apparently most deeply affected—his sentences being uttered in those broken accents which truly portrayed the excessive, earnest workings of the inner man. The audience were on the alert, and every neck was stretched to catch the words. He spoke as follows:—"Moderator, it is with extreme regret that I rise to submit a paper expressive of my own views and of my brethren who think as I do, regarding the result of the present debate. I am under the necessity of taking this step, purely from a conviction that it is necessary to the maintenance of the principles of the Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanting Church in Scotland; and I have simply to ask you, after having heard it read, myself and others may have leave to to retire in order to sign."

During the reading of the protest, the Court seemed to be much moved, and it was evident that by the time that Mr. Anderson had finished reading that a number of the members were in a high state of excitement. On concluding, Mr. Anderson asked leave for himself and others to retire and sign the protest; but amid loud cries of "agreed!" "agreed!" Mr. Finlay jumped to his feet evidently alarmed at the courtesy which was about to be extended to the protesters, and said, "I think, Mr. Moderator, we cannot allow them to retire. See that you do not stultify yourself in this matter. If it's a lawyer's document, they'll claim all the property." Mr. Kay,—"So long as it has not been signed it has no place here." Several members of the Synod here sprung to their feet, exclaiming, "Don't let it be signed," "You must take care what you do, or they will claim all the Church property," "Don't touch it," "Don't let them retire," and twenty other senseless cries, which were lost in the babel of sounds, which seemed, unconsciously, to escape from the lips of the Reverends and Elders.

Here, Dr. Anderson walked up to the Clerk and tabled the protest along with a shilling, and asked that it might be recorded on the minutes. Here the Rev. Thomson, of Eaglesham, lifted the protest and shilling and with marked indignation, threw them towards Mr. Anderson. During all this time, all was confusion and uproar; and appeared more like a congregation of drunkards than a Church Court. After a time, Mr. Gould contrived to settle the tumult; on which the Dr. with Messrs. Dunn and Martin again stepped up to the Clerk and recording of the protest. The Clerk asked the Moderator if the would record it? The Moderator replied, "No! it is an informal document." The Dr. accordingly left the protest on the table of Synod, and, in the midst of the most solemn silence, this aged, holy man of God, followed by the other protesters, left the Court, protesting against the clamant defections of the degenerate Covenanting Church. On Mr. Anderson leaving the Rev. Thomson, accompanied by M. S. Tart and Finlay rushed forward to the table, snatched up the protest and the shilling, and contemptuously threw them after the protesters.

Next day, an altogether unexpected episode occurred, which, for a time, disturbed the placidity of the Court. Mr. A. Ferguson, Notary Public, with Messrs. J. Stevenson and B. Keith entered the Court. Mr. Ferguson quietly walked up to the Moderator and Clerk, and handed each a document from Mr. A. McCormick, Procurator, on behalf of the protesters; intimating that Dr. Anderson and his protesting brethren had, that day, met in the original Secession Church, Glasgow, as the Constitutional Synod of the Covenant Church, and proceeded to transact business there, solemnly protesting against the doings of the majority. Here the suspicion of some of the members were aroused; a cry arose, "there is strangers in the Court, put them out"; on which, the Moderator and Clerk threw the papers from them. Here Mr. Finlay rushed forward, seized the papers as they fell, threw them at the Notary, exclaiming, "We have nothing to do with you or your papers; here, take them with you." The Notary left the Court, on which, the junior beadle then took up his part of the performance; kicked the protest from the Church into the street; and with many efforts on the part of the members to gain equanimity, the Synod set about the business of the day.—Bible Politician.

British North American Almanac for 1864.

Mr. John Lovell, the enterprising Publisher, intends, we see, to publish an Almanac for 1864, which will be also a repository of general information. From the known enterprise and energy of the publisher we anticipate something of a superior character. The publication aims at being British North American in its scope. It will give all existent information, on our militia, commerce, manufactures, agriculture, history, topography, &c., &c. Mr. Lovell invites information on any of the subjects referred to.

NIGHT SCHOOL.

We draw attention to the advertisement of Mr. Scott, in another column. It will be seen that he intends, on Monday next, opening a Night School in Peterborough. Such a thing, in our opinion, is much wanted, and as we have seen some of Mr. Scott's testimonials, we have no doubt he will be able to give satisfaction to such as patronize him. Young men, you are better at Night School than at place of a more questionable character.

CAMP MEETING.

The Camp Meeting closed yesterday morning. We believe it has met the most sanguine expectations of those who have had the direction. Immense numbers were present on Sunday. We understand that the Committee, on the whole, were highly pleased with the decorum and good order that were at all times observed on the grounds. This speaks well for the community.

COULTER & STEVENSON'S HALL.

We have long felt the want of a decent public Hall; but Messrs. Coulter & Stevenson have now one ready in the new building, which we think will be found to be the "right thing." It is spacious, and well lighted and seated; and we have the authority of Madame Anna Bishop for saying it is well adapted to the human voice.

NORWOOD.

Our subscribers in Norwood, can hereafter get their PAPERS FREE OF POSTAGE, by calling at the store of Mr. C. Wilson, and at which place we have made arrangements to leave them.

WOLVERINE.

Mr. Way, book-keeper of Mr. Shaw's Mill, shot a large Glutton or Wolverine, in a Cedar Swamp, about three miles from Town. It measured about three feet long.

Mr. Brown and the "Montreal Advertiser."

Some talk has been created here by a scandalous attack of the Montreal Advertiser on Mr George Brown, in connection with a suit now pending in the courts of Upper Canada between that gentleman and Mr. Freeland. Nothing could be more unjust than the imputations of the Advertiser. Mr. Brown has not sought to escape the payment of one shilling that is legally or morally due; all he has sought is to compel Mr. Freeland to make up his account from the commencement of the transaction in 1857, while Mr. Freeland refuses to go further back than December, 1860, when a judgment was unfortunately allowed to be taken without inquiry as to the mode in which the amount due was computed. Mr. Brown never denied his agreement to pay twelve-and-a-half per cent. under the mortgage, but he does deny his liability to pay it under the judgment. What he did was to pay into court the whole balance of principal, with 12½ per cent. to date of judgment, and six per cent. from that date; and then asked the court to compel Mr. Freeland to discharge his judgment and collect his remaining 6½ per cent. from the date of the judgment on his mortgage, if on a just reckoning from the beginning of the transaction anything could be shown to be due. This was the only mode by which Mr. Brown could secure a just reckoning from the Commissioner; and, as Mr. Justice Wilson's decision shows, it was decided against him on a mere question of law. So doubtful was the Judge himself on the point, that he suggested an appeal by Mr. Brown to the full court, which is now being made.

Political warfare, albeit bitter, is fair enough, but this dragging of private transactions into the political arena and maliciously distorting them, is another and a totally different thing. Mr. Brown, as everybody knows, has had pecuniary difficulties of no ordinary kind to contend against; but he has fought them through them bravely. If his political opponents cannot overcome him with proper political weapons, they should at least be content to leave his private affairs alone.—Quebec Mercury.

CROPS IN THE REBEL STATES.—It is stated that the wheat crop this season in the rebellious State will foot up 56,639,500 bushels, which will be an excess over the crop of 1860, as stated in the last census, of 20,273,600 bushels. The crop it is said, have been gathered in good order.

RELIEF IN TEN MINUTES.

BRYAN'S

PULMONIC WAFERS.

The most certain and speedy remedy ever discovered for all Diseases of the Chest and Lungs, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, Difficult breathing, Sore throat &c., &c., &c.

THESE WAFERS give the most instantaneous and perfect relief and when perseverred with according to directions, never fail to effect a rapid and lasting cure. Thousands have been restored to perfect health who have tried other means in vain. To all classes and all constitutions they are equally a blessing and a cure—some speedy disease, no matter how long the disorder may have existed, or however severe it may be, provided the organic structure of the vital organs is not hopelessly decayed. Every one afflicted should give them an impartial trial.

To Vocalists and Public Speakers, these Wafers are peculiarly valuable; they will in one day remove the most severe occasional hoarseness; and their regular use for a few days will, at all times, increase the power and flexibility of the voice, greatly improving its tone, compass and clearness, for which purpose they are regularly used by many professional vocalists

Select Poetry.

WHERE CAN I MAKE A RAISE.

Tell me, ye flitting clouds,
That through the heavens soar,
Is there no spot on earth
Where "hard times" are no more?
Where money's not so "hard?"
Where merchants do not "break?"
Banks don't call you "foul,"
When all your cash they take?
The fleecy clouds hovered to earth, so low,
Then sighed in pity "we really do not know."

Tell me, ye waters wild,
Way where the sun goes down,
Is there in other parts a place
Where "hard up" isn't known?
Some dear, delightful dell,
Some valley of the West,
Where free from toil and work,
A weary man finds rest?
From "war on West" I fear the answer will come,
"We know of some—you'd better stay at home!"

Tell me, ye waters wild,
Whose billows ever play,
Is there 'midst the ocean's depths
No island far away,
Where "used up" men can find
From business cares a rest?
Where "suspension" is not known,
Some place with "banks" not blest?
The fierce waves broke upon the rocky shore
And sighed 'in most places such ills are lower.'

Tell me, my empty purse,
Friend of those "better times,"
Is there no sort of place
Where I can raise the "dimes?"
Is there no lucky spot
Where I can raise the gold,
Among all 'known my friends
In happy days of old?
My purse (empty head) thinks my friends will lend,
Warm in cold self, and says "suspend!"

THE ROAD TO POOR FARMING.

As the road to poor farming is not generally understood, though it is crowded with travellers, we throw up the following landmarks from the Springfield Republican, for the common benefit:—

1. Invest all your capital in land, and run in debt for more.
2. Hire money to stock your farm.
3. Have no faith in your own business, and be always ready to sell out.
4. Buy mean cows, spavined horses, poor oxen, and cheap tools.
5. Feed hog hay and mouldy corn stalks exclusively, in order to keep your stock tame: fiery cattle are terribly hard things on old, rickety waggons and ploughs.
6. Use the oil of hickory freely whenever your oxen need strength; it is cheaper than hay or meal, keeps the hair lively, and pounds out all the grubs.
7. Select such calves for stock as the butchers abus—beauties of runts, thin in the hams, and pot-bellied; but be sure to keep their blood thin by scanty herbage; animals are safest to breed from that haven't strength to herd.
8. Be cautious about manufacturing manure; it makes the field black and mournful about planting time; besides it is a deal of work to haul it.
9. Never waste time by setting out fruit and shade trees; fruit and leaves rotting about the place makes it unhealthy.
10. Never subscribe for an agricultural paper; it is an absurd waste of money.

SIMPLE RULES ON SHOEING.

BY W. JONES, M.R.C.V.S., LONDON.

1st. After having taken off the old shoe, shorten the toe, and remove all the dead and loose parts of the hoof. Do not cut the sole or pare the frog, except when the foot has received an injury from a nail or otherwise, when it must be cut out.

2nd. Let the shoe be of equal thickness, or rather thinner at the heel. The ground and foot surface should be perfectly level. The shoe should lay light on the heel.—Too many nails are objectionable, and these should be kept as far as possible from the heels.

3rd. For the hind feet there are no objections to calkins, though they are of very doubtful benefit. Horses travel better without them. The hind shoes are made thinner at the toes than at the quarters, the nails also can be put nearer to the heels without causing inconvenience.

4th. Side clips should be avoided, they destroy the heel, and the same in the case when the nails are too near together. The shoe should never be rasped, as it destroys the enamile of the hoofs, renders them brittle, and causes sandcrack, and consequently, lameness.

5th. Expansion is a fatal error which has led to many abuses in shoeing, such as paring off the sole and frog, rasping off the hoof, &c. The elasticity of the foot, which is, however, very limited, exists only in the upper part of the hoof, principally round the coronet. On the lower part of the toe it is nothing.

THE ORIGIN OF A PLAY.—A very good story is told of the manner in which the younger Dumas, famous by his Dame aux Camelias and his Demi Monde was induced to write another play, he being of rather an indolent disposition by nature. Shortly after Beaufort's assumption of management, he desired a play from Dumas and went to his Hotel to see him:

'Sorry, my dear fellow, that I can't talk with you; but I'm going out with Z——to take a long swim.'

'Very well, replied the manager, I'm very fond of swimming, myself, and will accompany you if you'll let me.'

Hardly were they in the water, when Beaufort placed his hands upon Dumas' shoulders, and asked:

'Do you like to be dushed?'

'No, I hate it.'

'Well, I'm stronger than you, and I'll duck you three times, if you don't write a play.'

'Nonsense!'

'Not a bit of it.'

'You're mad.

'Am I? Well so. Dusk No. 1. And in goes Dumas.

'Stop. I agree.

'A long piece?'

'Yes. On my honor.'

'You're a good fellow. An revoir.'

'How I are you not going to take a long swim?'

'What's the good of it? I only wanted to get a promise from you—I've got it and I'm going.'

And that was the way that M. Alexander Dumas, fils, came to write 'The Prodigal Father.'

will be carried on heretofore, with the cream of English Literature. In connection with Art the ablest criticism will continue to be published in its columns. To these are added such Editorial Notices of current events as are deemed to be of interest to a circle of intelligent readers, whether British or American. The Albion furnishes, it is believed, a valuable weekly budget of information and entertainment.

THE ALBION ENGRAVINGS.

We have on hand copies of the Albion Engravings and subscribers and others can be furnished with them—at $3 each to subscribers and $5 to non-subscribers. A few proof copies of the Florence Nightingale print on India paper may be had. The following engravings are also on hand:

Chelsea Queen Victoria, Lord's Prince Albert, Allan's Sir Walter Scott, Stuart's Washington, Matticon's Benjamin Franklin. Cope's First Trial by Jury, Beattie's St. Paul's London, Portrait of General Havelock, Herring's Three Members of the Temperance Society, The Castle of Ischia from Stanfield's Picture, Wunderlich's Mary Queen of Scots, Leader's Return from Hawking, Landseer's Dignity and Impudence, Landseer's Bolt Frost, Dr. Kane at the Grave of Sir John Franklin's Men, Wilkie, Columbus presenting to his Timony of a New World, and the Faith of Niagara from an original drawing made for the Albion.

Engravings can be safely forwarded by mail or express, on paste-board roller, at a charge of a few cents.

Money may be transmitted in registered letters at the risk of the office.

Subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces have to pay 26 cents per annum for American Postage.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
TWELFTH VOLUME.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The July number commences the Twelfth Volume of the Atlantic Monthly, and will contain such a list of contents as will satisfie it to marked consideration. Nathaniel Hawthorn contributes to the number of the new volumes "Outside glimpses of English Poverty," one of the most interesting of his admirable English Sketches.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has written for it "The Doings of a Sun-Steam." Robert Dale Owen discusses "The Claims of Labor or Service," and presents some new views for the study of the people of America. Gail Hamilton continues her popular "Gala Days." Professor Agassiz offers another eloquent paper on mountains. And many other articles of equal value with the above, will be includedded in the forthcoming number.

Begun in 1857, the "Atlantic Monthly" has now reached its sixty-eighth number. Its circulation increasing largely from the start, has given it such a currency throughout the country as no other magazine has ever acquired. Its faith in impartial liberty as a principle, and its warfare against Despotism in every form, have made it a welcome visitor, far and wide, every month. It does not shrink in these our days of trial and battle, nor let go of its firm belief in the brighter days to come which Right and Justice are sure at ways to win, but its future pages will show an increased activity in placing before the midst of the people an unfaltering confidence in the power of the North to limit the existence of a rebellion founded in cruel injustice and oppression.

The prosperity of the Atlantic enables its conductors to employ the most eminent talent of country in its columns. All the best known writers in American literature, contributing constantly to its pages, give us the sole right to be known as our national magazine. Its staff still comprises a the following names among its leading contributors now:

James Russell Lowell, Henry W. Longfellow, Louis Agassiz, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathanial Hawthorne, C. C. Hasavall, T. W. Higginson, Author "Margaret Howth," Mrs. Julia W. Howe, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Oliver W. Holmes, John G. Whittier, E. P. Whipple, Bayard Taylor, Chas. E. Norton, G. S. Hillard, H. Giles, Walter Mitchell, H. T. Tuckerman, John Weiss, Mrs. H. B. Stowe, Harriet Martineau, Charles Ready, "The Country Parson," Rose Terry, Harriet R. Prescott, Robert T. S. Lowell, J. T. Trowbridge, Edward Everett, Professor A. D. White:

The foregoing list will be seen include as

THE LEADING AMERICAN WRITERS.

And is such as to warrant the publishers in promising

ONE EVENING'S REFLECTION.

Rejoice once more, the Harvest's o'er!
The sun gives shorter light.
The labouring man with pleasure can
At night read, muse and write.
I must deplore, no classic lore
My feeble thoughts inspire.
Learned or not, I may take note
Of scenes that do transpire:
Our neighbouring States war devastates,
Soldiers their weapon's wield,
Death's missiles flies, while thousands lie
Toombed in the battle field.
Your muskets stack, your swords put back,
Enough of men is slain!
May peace awake! asunder break
The slave's enthralling chain.
French troops did go to Mexico,
More wealth to aggrandize;
Napoleon's schemes are British themes,
They watch with zealous eyes.
Russia's Czar is waging war,
To crush the Pole's once more;
While they resist may God assist,
Their freedom to restore.
Rumour's of war comes from afar;
Revolts, outbreaks appear;
Creation heaves; while some believe
Some great convulsion's near.
By passing signs some good divines
Foretel great wars in store;
Trouble and pains, suffering and chains,
With tribulation's sore.
'Tis true, that we may never see
That cruel predicted storm;
May each prepare, with Christ, to share
Death, in whatever form.

Miscellaneous News.

Thomas Elliott's Speculations.

Thomas Elliott rang at the front door of Mr. Abijah Gregg, at five o'clock p. m. A livery-stable hostler meanwhile held, hard by, two very correct steeds, duly equipped with saddle and side-saddle. A curiously big, red, full-eyed Irish damsel, very frowzy about the hair, opened the door.

Thomas is an impatient man. And the door opened he said, "Come Lilly! Hurry! Every minute—"

"An' it's not Miss Lilly that's in at all," said the Celtic lady, with a grin, and in a harsh, dry, rasping voice, as if her throat was lined with sand paper. And there was a queer look in her big, bold, prominent eyes, as she added, "The mistress see Miss Lilly won't see you thin." And therewithal she sedulously framed in her very solid person into the opening of the door. Thomas Elliott is a good young man certainly. But he certainly used a bad word at about this time—no matter what. He, however, speedily showed his self-control by extracting from his pocket a shining half-dollar, which he inserted into the hand of the Princess Margaret—for such, at least with him and Lilly, was the lofty style and title of the damsel of the door. And with that he winked. A certain visible mollification might now be seen to pervade the hard face of the Princess Margaret, and she grinned. Then the enterprising Thomas, with barefaced assumption, said, in a loud voice, "Not ready yet? I'll wait in the hall." And thus pretending he thrust forward in such wise that the Princess was obliged to make way, and he entered. But with a disagreeable sensation he said to himself, "There's something wrong" And there was.

What may be termed a simultaneous dialogue was in progress at the head of the stairs, executed in duetto by the strident soprano of Mrs. Gregg and the low-pitched, full, clear alto of Miss Lily; both earnest and half audible; in that smothered tone which we use when we are apprehensive that an inappropriate third party may hear us, but when we are too angry to care much if he does.

Tom stood, half-bearing and uncertain, in the pure receptivity of an unexpecting spectator. The Princess Margaret had disappeared to her depths. An angry beauty, in riding-habit and cap and feather, bolding up her long skirts, tripped hurridly down stairs, her face flushed and eyes sparkling and dewy with anger and tears; too exalted in mingled passions to care for forms.

"Come, Tom!" she said, and held out her hand, "I could see you once!"

And she led him into the parlor and shut the door. It is a mortification to be obliged to add that Mrs. Gregg came softly down stairs and listened at the keyhole; but a satisfaction to add further that, in spite of her listening, she could hear nothing at all.

Old Gregg—it would be in vain to deny that he is known in the street as Pig Gregg—is in the general commission business, and worth money in a big man, oldish, fat, with pendulous jowls, heavy of eyelid, bald of head, wigged, thick of neck, florid, full-blooded, as hot as ginger, an obstinate as a pyramid, harsh, vulgar, a greasy eater, uneducated, yet withal of shrewd, energetic, strong, large faculties, and successful in business. Mrs. Gregg shows the frame of a good face and figure; in dry and sharp and thin and pale as cheapest Rhinwein; a sad scold, I'm afraid; penurious and imperious. She and her husband are good bad examples of the American social and business life perversions of first-rate natural gifts, physical and mental.

But violets may grow in a barn-yard. These two pernicious elders certainly introduced into this world, and long maintained upon their premises, one of the most delightful daughters ever known—Lily Gregg. The daughter's graceful baptismal name was, perhaps, the last faint floweret of the romance of her poor, cried-up mother's departed youth. She is of middle-size, plump; with long, abundant, wavy dark-brown hair, having a warm bright gleam in it where the light strikes it, as if it had dreamed of being a clear gold-red. Her skin is thin and fine and clear, and she has plenty of swift warm blood; so that her complexion is rosy, pure, translucent—like melted glass and red roses all mingled. It is a rare complexion. I never saw but two other like it; and one belonged to a Clerk of a Court, and the other to a strong-minded female lecturer. How inscrutable is the distribution of things! There never were such red perfect sculptured lip's as Lily's—the mouth in most seldom beautiful of American features; nor such clear white pearls of teeth; nor such wonderful large, grand eyes, deep lined, under eyebrows marked, but not heavy; and arched, but not too much—that indicates shallowness and fickleness; nor such a perfect arm and head, down even to the minute finish of the finger-tips and the setting of the nails; nor such lithe, easy grace of figure and motion. She has all the perfection of step and form and gesture that belong to a splendid physique, perfect organisms, and strong, rich, pure, full-flowing vitality animating all. How the mischief these obnoxious old parents of hers—Well, never mind she is their daughter, and that's enough.

But now, after all, it is somewhere here that I must have meant to begin—as thus:

In these present fearful times; in the midst of busines troubles, war, taxation, and almost every thing else; in these hard, hard times did Thomas Elliott win, as it were at the same moment, a most lovely wife and eke a most lovely sum of money. For it was done within the year 1862.

Elliott, please to understand, was clerk to Pig Gregg, and a very good clerk was he; with all his employers business abilities, and a large supply of natural, good-natured politeness besides, and a good salary, and a few thousand dollars of his own by this time, and considerable music talent, and very correct costume. A tall, good-looking chap is Master Thomas withal, with keen blue eyes and an intelligent look. So, in consideration of all this, and of his consequent convenience as a beau, and certain prepossessions in the bosom of Madam Gregg in favor of Tom's undeniable "good family," and since—as it appeared to the numskulls of parents—he certainly was not in danger of aspiring to the large wealth of the only child of the great commission-merchant!—in consideration of all this, I say, Elliott often escorted the old lady or the young one, or both, to public or private festivities, and sometimes past an evening at the Griggish mansion.

But Master Tom, who often made Miss Lily laugh, and saw her splendid white teeth gleam between her red lips like a pearls' nest in the cleft of a ruby, notwithstanding all the proprieties, and "against the peace and contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided," made up his resolute masculine mind to become the proprietor of the teeth, lips, and Lily altogether; and we hasten to add—for this is far from being a love-story—she was substantially consenting unto the same at this time.

Writing letters is always dangerous. Henry Clay lost the Presidency of the United States thereby; and Talleyrand would always agree to hang you if he could get one line of your hand-writing. Thomas Elliott had not sufficiently laid these things to heart that fine morning when he indited that perhaps reprehensibly-enthusiastic note to Lily, which Mrs. Gregg seeing, and knowing the hand writing, could not resist the temptation to open—pleading to herself her duty to her daughter, and impelled by vague suspicions based on many minute signs, for some time past the cause of uneasiness to her and to her lean bosoms fat lord. So this little document, as Tom afterward said was Wall Street slang, "blew every thing higher than Gilderoy flew his kite"—a phrase suggestive of infinite queries about the diversions of that gentleman.

All this time Thomas and Lily are in the parlor, and Mrs. Gregg in a silent "forse" (It's a good word, but not in Webster) outside.

Lily said, softly, "Oh, Tom, you mustn't come any more!"

"What is it?" enquired the gentleman.

"They read your note!" exclaimed Lily, coloring high with vexation at her parents, and shame for them too. "They are so angry!"

The young persons were silent for a moment. Lily's tones were fervent and resolute, and Tom was too much of a man to dispute her. And he felt besides that she meant "at present." Besides, did not his cunning man's instinct make him know surely that the beautiful girl was his own? Yes, indeed. A man knows the love that is his as surely and as quickly as a woman, and more so. But the passion and the fervid will of a strong man moved him to require and receive—none the less because it was not needed—an outward token before he departed. And he half lifted Lily, who was crying a little now, to a seat, and knelt close by her—and she did not resist at all. And he put his arms about her and whispered.

"I will go, Lily. But you do not mean that I shall loose you, Lily? Kiss me once. You never gave me a kiss."

She lifted her face to his, and lightly laid her arms around his neck and kissed him once. Then he rose quickly and departed, riding away with the hostler.

When, next morning—it was April 25, A. D. 1862—Thomas Elliott entered the store of Abijah Grigg his usually bright face wore a somewhat resolved and pre-occupied look. The eminent merchant gruffly greeted the obscure clerk. Like a true vulgarian, he did not administer with plain directions the awful and confounding admonition with which he felt himself charged, but transfused his ill nature into the general texture of his conduct. He was sour of face and rude of manner. He found fault with the rate of commission which Tom had accepted on that last lot of guano; was inclined to charge upon Tom the non-return of a certain customer of yesterday; quite snarled over various letters, and after sundry other negglings, at last squarely charged that it was Tom's fault that the beaver-hunter had not berthed the Sea Nymph (with salted hides) right in front of his store, but had laid her across the end of a dock two blocks away.

Upon this Tom, who had answered him not a word, quietly wiped his pen, put up the blotter he had been writing in, turned down the lid of his inkstand, dismounted his Faber No. 2 from its clerkly perch over his right ear and put it on the rack, took off and hung up his venerable office-coat, and put on a very neat "dress-coat," took his hat, and, turning to his respected and quite puzzled employer, said, not without a certain loftiness of demeanor.

"Mr. Grigg, let's not have any unnecessary difficulty. I have no particular expectation of coming back to your home again that I know of."

Here the old merchant looked relieved, but his face clouded again as Tom added.

"I meant to have given you more notice, but things have happened within a day or two have hurried me. I'm through with my work for you Mr. Grigg. I'm to see a man at eleven this morning about a partnership. I can recommend William Waters for my place, if you don't think of any better man.'

He held out his hand, saying, good-naturedly. "Good-by, Sir! success to you."

A MAMMOTH HOTEL.

The Lindell Hotel, St. Louis, has been completed, and will be opened on the 1st of October. This is the largest hotel in the United States. Some idea of its dimensions may be gathered from the following figures and comparison with the Continental in Philadelphia:

	Continental.	Lindell.
Front	335 ft,	272 ft,
Depth	194 "	227 "
Dining rooms	99x47 "	45x233 "
Capacity guests	800 to 900	1,200 to 1,300

The Lindell is seven stories high, exclusive of basement. Its height from sidewalk to cornice is 112 feet. The two dining rooms are divided by a carving room. The part of the dining room known as the gentleman's ordinary, is 128 by 45; the ladies' ordinary is 45 by 90, while the carving room, which can be thrown open to unite both dining-rooms, is 55 by 45. On the same door, and immediately off from the carving room, is a large kitchen, 60 by 45 feet, and 20 feet high.

The bricks laid in the walls would be sufficient to pave an area of more than thirty-eight acres. This is in addition to 8,000 perches of rubble masonary in the foundation; 35,000 cubic feet of cut stone in the fronts; 740 tons of cast and wrought iron; twenty seven acres of plastering; 810 windows; 650 inside doors; 3,240 pounds of copper for gutters; the plate glass used would cover an acre of ground; the floors seven acres. The shelving, or wash-boards, laid in a continuous line, would be thirteen miles; and if a boarder desires to take a walk before breakfast, he may travel through the wide and lofty corridors one mile and a quarter without going over the same floor a second time. Beside the marble flooring and other flagging, 300,000 feet of flooring boards have been laid, requiring 30,000 yards of carpeting to cover them. Thirty two tons of sash-weight were used, 16,000 feet of gas-pipe, 120,000 pounds of lead and 30,000 of iron-pipe to supply it with water, beside 87,700 feet of steam pipe for heating it. Thirty-two miles of bell wire are used, and three watertanks, or reservoirs, into which thirty thousand gallons of water are taken up and distributed to all parts of the house, rest upon the roof. The actual cost of the building is $950,000, which, with the ground (valued at $426,400,) makes the whole value $1,275,400—not to speak of the furniture, $200,000 worth of which is now being imported and put in. So that when the whole is completed, next month, the whole property will have cost nearly a million and a half dollars.

HOME.

It is very pleasant to fill the eye with beautiful picture of cities that burn on the plains in the yellow gold of sunset—of rivers spotted with the the snowy wing of commerce, shooting their arrowy length through embattled rocks, or dragging them like glittering trails around the base of shaggy mountains. But are there no sunrise and sunsets about the "brown old homestead," where oaks and elms wave instead of plumed palms—which imagination fed with tender memories, can color as delightfully as the morning skies of Mount Blanc, or as bewilderingly lovely as the evening charms of Naples and the Orient. Are breezes drawn from the Adriatic, or the Hellespont, any softer to the heated brow than the airs that drift from the home valley, the daisy-locked meadow, or the green pastures on the hill-side? Are there no precious memories hanging like the haze of Paradise over the "home of our youth" —no dreamy associations clustering in the very tree-tops more alluring than the golden apples of the Hesperides? Are there no moonlight glimpses of the olden evenings of sweet summer time, and the ripe and mellow days of hazy autumn; of strolls down grassy lanes, where the green and gray mosses made fantastic patchwork on the old stone walls; of loitering by the flower-gemmed streams, and walks in the cloisters of the "grand old woods?" Yes! and their soft and tender murmurs are filling the sensitive ear of memory with lulling melodies far sweeter than the harp's enchanting strain, or "the notes that gush so thrillingly from beauty's ruddy lips.

Into one nook, when the sails are tattered and the chart is gone, our barque may drift with safety; the waves of the world are broken before they reach the haven: their roar is spent before it finds its way into that harbor—sounding like the murmur of the sea in chambers of red-lipped shells—and that nook is Home!—Christian Visitor.

HINTS FOR HOUSE-KEEPERS.

If the covers of sofas and chairs are dirty, they may be cleaned without being removed, by first washing them over with a flannel, then before they are dry, sponge them over with a strong solution of salt and water, in which a small quantity of gall has been mixed. The windows of the room should be opened so as to secure a perfect drying, and the colors and freshness of the article will then be restored. Floor-cloths may be cleaned with a mixture of magnesia, only milk warm, followed by warm water in the same manner that carpets are cleansed. They should be rubbed with dry flannel till the polish is restored. This is a process much to be preferred to that of rubbing the cloth with wax, which leaves it stinky and liable to retain the dust and dirt for a long time. Very hot water should never be used in cleaning floor-cloth, as it brings off the paint. Cleaning mirrors and polished steel articles is an easy operation, when rightly understood. The greatest care should be taken in cleaning a mirror to use only the softest articles, lest the glass should be scratched. It should first be dusted with a leather brush, then washed over with a sponge dipped in spirits to remove the fly-spots; after this it should be dusted with the powder blue in a thin muslin bag, and finely polished with an old silk handkerchief. Polished steel articles if rubbed every morning with leather will not become dull or rusty; but if rust has been suffered to gather it must be immediately removed by covering the steel with sweet oil, and allowing it to remain on for two or three days; then sprinkle it over with finely powdered unslacked lime, and rub it with polishing leather.

LIFE IN BED.

We all know that sleep is an necessary to the support of animal life as food. Our vital machinery would soon wear out without it, and if it were not for the intervals of healthful insensibility that sleep affords to the brain we should all go mad with too much thinking. Even plants sleep, and the cold lymph that flows through their venous systems would cease to circulate if the active principle of their existence were not recruited by repose. Children are believed to grow faster during their slumber than when awake, and although some very smart modern philosophers have advanced the theory that it is possible for man to live and enjoy life without sleep, the doctrine, like the equally absurd dogma that is possible to live without sustenance, is so manifestly absurd that common sense laughs it to scorn.

But the bed is not for sleep solely. We lie down to slumber, but we pass many an hour in bed, calculating, planning, hoping, imagining. The course of our lives is shaped to some extent, as we lie between the sheets and blankets. Of the still night and early morn are born mighty schemes that are carried out during the stirring day. The mind awakes from a profound and dreamless slumber with all its faculties invigorated and emboldened. Difficulties that appalled us when fatigued and overworn lose half their terrors in the presence of an intellect strengthend by perfect rest. Sleep is to the brain what prostration on the bosom of the earth was to the Titans, we rise from it "giants refreshed." Perhaps the myth which represents the "flooring" of these rebellious demi-gods as having such a genial effect on their muscular powers was intended to typify the uses of tired nature's sweet restorer.' There is both strength and wisdom in the pillow, else why should the propriety of consulting it have grown into a proverb.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S PRUDENCE.

"I was told the other day an anecdote of the Queen which illustrates her good sense and real desire to promote the welfare of her subjects. She had agreed to have her photograph taken for the gratification or such of her subjects as might desire to possess the counterfeit presentment of their ruler. She presented herself in a plain black silk without a particle of ornament. The photographer ventured to suggest that she should send for some jewellery. 'No,' said the Queen, 'this photograph is to go among my people, and I wish to do all I can to discourage extravagance.' It is such little anecdotes as these that have secured the Queen a high place in the regard of the people. I have everywhere heard her spoken of with affectionate respect."

FIFE WHEAT—The following reliable account of the introduction of the Fife Wheat into this country may prove somewhat interesting to your agricultural readers. A respectable farmer, Mr. David Fife, residing in the township of Ontonabee, a few miles from Rice Lake, received a letter some years ago from a friend in Glasgow, in which was enclosed a small sample of wheat which his friend had picked from a cargo then delivering in Glasgow from Dantzic. Mr. Fife sowed the grain in his garden, but after it came to maturity some cows broke in and attacked the little patch. He succeeded in saving only one head. This he rubbed out and sowed the following spring, which produced a cupful; and the following year this produced a peck. By careful cultivation he was enabled to supply his neighbors with seed wheat. The Fife wheat is now widely spread over the fields of North America, and held in high estimation for its productiveness and excellent quality—taking its name from the gentleman that first brought it into cultivation on this continent.—Kingston News.

The contest for championship of America, between the rival rowers, Hamill and Ward, came off yesterday afternoon, at Poughkeepsie, and resulted in the defeat of the latter. The distance rowed was five miles which was done in the unprecedented time of thirty-seven minutes and fifty-eight seconds. Ward was the favorite in the betting at one hundred to eighty, previous to the start, rowing to his beating Hamill in their previous contest. Hamill may now be acknowledge the champion oarsman of America, this being his third victory ever Joshua Ward.

Peterborough Examiner.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8TH, 1863.

NOTICE.

THE UNDERSIGNED have entered into Partnership, as Publishers of the PETERBOROUGH EXAMINER newspaper, and General Printers, under the name or firm of "Dunn & Graham."

JAMES M. DUNN.
ALEXANDER GRAHAM

Peterboro', Oct. 7, 1863.

From the above it will be seen that a change has been made in the proprietary of the EXAMINER. That a change, too, has taken place in the Editorial department of this paper, will, we apprehend, be fully realized by our readers. We believe, that since these changes, the EXAMINER has not in any way deteriorated, but that, on the contrary, it has greatly improved, both in matter and typographical appearance. On such occasions, it is generally expected by the public that it will be announced whether or not there will be any change in the views or policy of the paper. With regard to this, we may just at present state, that it will be the aim of its conductors to make the EXAMINER a strictly independent journal. By independent, we do not mean to ignore its political character, or have people believe it will be a non-political journal. On the contrary, we hold that a paper like the EXAMINER must be essentially political, if it wishes to exert an influence to do any good in the locality where it circulates. It will strive, however, to maintain the golden mean between ultra-radicalism and old fogy toryism. It will, therefore, while it will be eminently conservative in all those particulars it deems among the essentials of the Province's prosperity and greatness, be among the first in its recognition, appreciation and support of any principles or movements of a reform or progressive nature which it believes, in their practical evolution, aid and application, will advance our country's interests, either by the discovery and development of latent talent, or new unemployed resources, by the infusion of new energy and vigor in its manufacturing or agricultural relations, or by the amelioration of the moral, social and intellectual condition of its inhabitants. It will, then, as may be inferred, support the principles enunciated by the great Reform-conservative party, which is now so dominant in the Upper Province. But, at the same time, it will approve and support good acts and measures, and denounce bad ones, emanate whence they may. By their merits alone will they be judged. So long as the present Ministry strives honestly—as, in our opinion, it has been doing—financially and otherwise to improve the Province, it will have the EXAMINER'S warm sympathy and support. The difficulties it has to grapple with and overcome, in consequence of the flagrant misrule of previous governments, have been of the most trying character; and we think it should have both time and opportunity of developing the policy, which, if developed, it is believed by many, will inaugurate a new and better state of things among us. With this view, we must strongly condemn and denounce the factious opposition now offered to the Government by those who have been instrumental in producing these evils which the Ministry is so anxiously and energetically wrestling to wipe away. We believe in fair play.

We believe that the interests of the manufacturer and farmer should be protected, if we would see them prosper. We will therefore advocate such measures as will have this important end in view. Our country requires capital; and this is the only way capital will be brought into it—the advocates of an opposite policy to the contrary notwithstanding.

This journal will be altogether unsectarian in its character. We hold that every man has a right to worship his God, and to hold his own peculiar religious opinions. He should not be favored, neither should he be proscribed on this account. To sectarian legislation, in every shape, or to legislation having sectarian tendencies, in any way, we are strongly opposed. Such legislation can do no good; and it may do a great deal of harm.

Our educational interests we deem of the first importance. To educate the people thoroughly and universally should be one of the highest aims of the legislature, as it is one of the most responsible duties devolving upon it. On this being properly done essentially depends Canada's future position and influence. Hence, we will advocate, in the fullest manner, the widest dissemination of the most liberal education among all classes of the people—irrespective of class, color, or creed.

As we believe free discussion elicits truth and sets people thinking, a reasonable share of our columns will be devoted to correspondence. All sides shall have a hearing; all that we can stipulate for is, that temperate language shall be used, and personalities avoided.

The latest general news of our own country, as well as the latest foreign intelligence, will regularly be found in the EXAMINER. The municipal and other local intelligence of this county will be given in our columns, and it will be our chief aim, in this and other important respects, to make the EXAMINER valuable as a LOCAL COUNTY PAPER, and a moral, entertaining and instructive family journal.

The Ingersol Chronicle says a respectable farmer, named Mason, residing in the Western part of Dereham, accidentally, shot his son—a promising lad of about eleven years of age—in the breast on Saturday last. The boy survived but a few hours. The distress of the parents is overwhelming.

MEASURES AND MEN.

Profession is easier than action, and words are easier than deeds. The conduct of the world proves this every day. In fact, we find those most extravagant in their professions of what they can do, and what they will do, not unfrequently the most remiss in what they ought to do. The dog who barks 'loudest' is to be the least feared; so the man who talks loudest and promises "most" is to be the least trusted. This, in particular, holds true in the political world, as at present constituted. The standard by which professional politicians are guaged, is not, generally, the highest; but low as it is, many fall far short of its requirements. In fact, it seems to be almost an understood thing, that politicians cannot be honest men; that politics must, necessarily, blunt the pure sensibilities of a man's nature, and tear out, as it were, from his breast, those high and ennobling principles of honor and rectitude which the Allwise Being has implanted therein to direct and govern him. So widely has and does this idea, in a practical point of view, prevail, that it has almost become a truism—received without demur or protest. We say practically, because we do not for a moment insinuate that, theoretically, it finds general acceptance with the reflective or intelligent. These, with more enlarged views, and truer perceptions of the real nature of politics, and of what politicians ought to be, would feel themselves insulted were they told that they entertained an idea, so pernicious in its nature and tendencies. They are earnest in this; but their conduct only too frequently contravenes what they would have others and themselves believe.—What they say and what they do are like the poles—antipodal. Party feeling and prejudices warp their judgments and blunt their perceptions—on other matters clear and vivid. They accord their vote without scruple to the man whom their party support, however low his moral character, or however condemnable his antecedents. Surely this is nothing less than a practical recognition of the principle, that integrity of conduct and uprightness of life, are not to be looked for in politicians. It is a pity it is so; and until a healthier sentiment pervades the community, and exerts its influence, we cannot look for the best and most honest men of our country in our halls of Legislation; where, we think it will be conceded, they are at present much wanted.

"Measures not Men" is the motto contemptuously (and mockingly) displayed at the head of some of our journals, and is the greatest burden of the song of those who, with strong predilection for a particular party, for the sake of spoils, and in view of possible contingencies, wish to keep in with all parties.

"Measures, not Men" sounds well; but, we are afraid that to most it as the tinkling brass and the sounding cymbal. It is the mere words and not the meaning they symbolize that find a lodging pace in the popular mind. In fact, the cry "Measures not Men," we look upon as a considerable amount of "fudge." In this view we are strengthened when we see the conduct of those who are loudest in shouting it. Their actions belie their words. It is the measures of "our" party, and not the men of the "other" party. The converse, "Men, not Measures" holds more true with them. The individuals they support can (in their opinion) do no wrong; the individuals they don't support can do nothing right. We think the conduct of the Corruptionists during the present Session of Parliament amply attests the truth of what we have just stated. It is conduct that illustrates the principle "Measurers not Men" with a vengeance. But blind to their own inconsistencies, they attempt by much talking to blind upon the people the belief that it is this principle that now actuates them in their persistent and unscrupulous opposition, and has done so all along. But the people of Upper Canada—the intelligent and independent portion of them, at least—are not then to be imposed upon. Their intelligence and common sense would be insulted by the supposition.

Now, we think, that the interests of the country, generally, would be greatly improved by the substitution of "Measures and Men" for "Measures not Men" by the people as their motive principle. The change of the words "not" to "and" is one of more importance than recognizable at first sight. In "Measures not Men," the character of the individual is too often ignored altogether; but in "Measures and Men" the character of the individual is practically scrutinized and weighed as it ought to be. It declares that no pure streams cannot flow from polluted fountains; so, neither can good and worthy measures proceed from unprincipled men. Hence, it inculcates the necessity of proper investigation into the antecedents of those who aspire to political fame or position. "Measures not Men" may do very well after elections, but, before elections, "Measures and Men" should be the motto which the true lover of his country should inscribe upon his banner and engrave upon his heart. If this were only done, there would be a much better state of things than at present; the pulse of our country now languid would beat with quickened energy and vitality; partyism would be stripped of its repulsive features—our interests would be represented by men—the best and most upright of life in the Province—the control of affairs would be trusted in the hands of those, whose business capacity and spotless reputation would be a guarantee that the affairs would be administered with the most rigid economy in the most unselfish spirit, and with a view to develop its energies, and promote its well being and glory both at home and abroad.

We think it becomes us all, then, as occasion offers, in electing parties to fill our municipal offices and to represent us in Parliament, to be more careful than we have been in investigating the candidate's past, and to be influenced in casting our votes accordingly. Let us do this with candidates for minor as well as for the highest places in our gift and we will not repent it. Let "Measures and Men" be our motto.

AMERICAN GENERALS.—Of the four regular Major Generals in the army, three are off duty; and of the seven regular Brigadiers, five are in retirement. The total number of Major Generals in the Volunteer service is 69; of volunteer Brigadiers, 256; and their annual compensation amounts to no less than $1,285,734. If each Brigadier commands four regiments of 1000 men each, as the law requires, then we have a force of 1,024,000 men under arms; otherwise a great surplus of expensive shoulder-straps.

The Emperor Napoleon's malady under which he is fast growing old and infirm, is such that he is not able to go on horseback without suffering intense pain, and all his visits to mineral springs do not seem to produce any permanent relief.

AMERICAN NEWS.

Late despatches from General ROSECRANS state, that no change had taken place in the situation of the forces around Chattanooga. The Federal army held a strong defensive position, and no attempt had been made by the enemy to dislodge them from it. General HALLECK is said to have voluminous despatches from General ROSECRANS. They are of a satisfactory character, but their publication at this time would be improper. It is stated that General POPE is to be corps-commander in the Army of the Cumberland, superseding either General McCOOK or General CRITTENDEN. Richmond papers received at Washington, contain an official despatch from General BRAGG, claiming as results of the late battles the capture of seven thousand prisoners, of whom two thousand were wounded, fifteen thousand stand of small arms, twenty-five stand of colors, and twenty-six pieces of artillery.

The World's Tennessee correspondent says that General ROSECRANS's lines of communication are now safe beyond doubt, but what he would have to contend with if attacked is matter of speculation, but no certainty. He will not be able to make any important move for some time, as a vast amount of transportation is said to have fallen into the hands of the enemy, and the character of the repulse was such as to paralyze the effectiveness of the army. That it escaped annihilation is a miracle, and yet all accounts agree that the rebel loss will far exceed ours, which will not reach ten thousand men, two thousand of whom are killed. The same correspondent gives an account of the wounded in Nashville. A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune makes the important statement that both General McCOOK and General CRITTENDEN have been relieved of their commands in the Army of the Cumberland, and ordered before the court of inquiry for an investigation into their conduct at the battles of Chickamauga. It is understood that General ROSECRANS makes serious complaints against them in his dispatches.

Advices have been received up to Saturday last. At headquarters it is estimated that the loss in the battle of Chickamauga was in killed 1,800, wounded 9,500, prisoners 2,500, total 13,000. It was the opinion that if the right wing had held its own the result would have been a decisive victory. The success of Gen. THOMAS on the left was much greater than has been represented in any published account of the battle. Gen. THOMAS routed LONGSTREET's corps and was in a position to pursue the enemy and would have done so had not the right wing been disorganized. No surprise is felt in the army that the enemy did not resume the attack. Their loss is believed to be 20,000. ROSECRANS' army is said to be in superb fighting trim, compact in organization, well supplied with provisions, &c., and full of confidence.

An arrival from the Potomac reports at Washington that no signs of the rebels are to be seen on the shores of the river. The Richmond EXAMINER says that Lee's policy is the defensive, and that he awaits an attack by General MEADE. The Confederate army is stated to occupy the strongest position it has held since the beginning of the war. General BUFORD's cavalry recognoissance last week was looked upon by the Confederates as the prelude to a general advance by the Army of the Potomac.

The Federals are confident in taking Charleston. From Southern journals we learn that the Union Troops fired upon the ruins of Fort Sumter on the 28th ult, for the first time for several weeks. They reported no damage done. The Confederate batteries were still firing upon the Union working parties. The iron-clad fleet were at their old anchorage, and perfectly quiet. The Charleston Courier reports that the fleet fired a salute in honor of Admiral Farragut's arrival at that port.

It is said that HOOKER will supersede BURNSIDE and that POPE will be appointed a command under ROSECRANS.

Gold is on the increase.

MEXICO.

It seems that the Mexicans are determined not to yield as quietly to French domination as it was before imagined. In fact the great work of subjugation has yet to be done, Juraez, who has established his head quarters at San Luis Potosi, is exerting himself most energetically to arouse the energies of the Mexican people in defence of their liberties. It is believed that he has now under his command an army of nearly 40,000. The French are terribly annoyed by Guerillas, who infest the neighborhood of Mexico, watching for opportunities to pounce upon the "invaders" At the same time the terribly distracted and unsettled state of the country, as well as the low moral condition of the people that characterize Mexico under its native governments cannot be otherwise than improved by the establishment of any government that can enforce order and obedience.

PRESENTATION.

On the evening of Oct. 6 a purse containing a handsome sum of money was presented by Captain Kennedy's Company of Light Infantry to Color Sergant Sault, drill constructor.

Capt. Kennedy was in the chair, it was moved by Lieut. Kennedy, seconded by Ensign Watterson that Color Sgt. Gaily be appointed to present the gift, which he did in a very appropriate speech, acknowledging on behalf of the company their very great appreciation of his efficiency and of the zeal he has manifested in bringing the company into a proper state of discipline.

Color Sergant Sault thanked the company in a very neat and soldier like speech, expressing his intention of always being at his post remembering that "England expects every man to do his duty."

COUNTY FAIR.

The County Fair was held for the first time at Norwood, on Thursday last. It was on the whole, inferior to those of preceding years. The Butter, Cattle and Ladies Departments exhibited a decided falling off. Some things shown, however, were of a superior nature. After the Fair was over, a number sat down to dinner in the International Hotel.

SCOTTISH AMERICAN JOURNAL.

We have not, for some time, noticed this able and interesting journal. It is as vigorous, piquant and reliable as ever. We hope it has—as it ought to have—a wide and a continually increasing circulation among Canadians. T. MACKIE is the agent in this place.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The political news is unimportant. Rumor says that the confederate envy at London is to be withdrawn. The Herald says that it was through the suggestions of MR. ADAMS that MR. MASON has been excluded from political intercourse. The Paris correspondent of the London Post says that a loan for the confederates is being talked of. The PAYS says the English journals are mistaken in looking upon the note lately published in the Moniteur, respecting the Florida, as a step toward the recognition of the confederates. The Opinions Nationale believes that the English cabinet, fearing that France may take possession of Mexico, are endeavoring to persuade the Emperor of Austria to consent to the acceptance of the throne by Maximilian. The Russian reply to the English note professes an ardent desire to restore tranquility to Poland, but deprecates intervention.

Pro-Southern English journals begin to see signs of collapse in the South. Even the Morning Herald admits that the last news showed that the numerical weakness of the South is beginning seriously to affect the operations of her armies.

The Confederate loan had relapsed from 30 to 28 per cent. discount under the Jura's News.

It is reported that the new Mexican loan will be £20,000,000 or £24,000,000 sterling.

The Russian reply to France is published. It is the same in effect as that to England, but cannot permit of provinces, to which no internal stipulations apply, being even incidentally alluded to.

Nothing is known as to the next step to be taken by the Powers.

The Paris Patrie urges that the reply be a recognition of the Poles as belligerents.

The Times' says if the Confederates are offended with England for trying to keep in the right, it is sorry for it, but the loss is theirs, while the relief to the British Government will be great and the nation will have nothing to repent.

The Times' city article warns the Government against going too far in stopping shipbuilding for belligerents' while munitions of war are freely supplied, and says the course bears too much resemblance to the views of Federal politicians.

The Europe of Frankfort asserts that the Archduke Maximilian has finally accepted the Mexican crown at all risks and perils, even renouncing his rights and prerogatives under the Austrian crown.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post asserts that the Washington Government assisted Juarez with arms and ammunition.

The Paris Moniteur published an address of August 15th, by the Polish National Government to Prince Czartorisky, which has already appeared in the English journals. The event created a sensation and caused a fall on the bourse. Many journals regard it as a virtual recognition of the Poles as belligerents.

The American ships EXPRESS and Anna F. Schmidt were destroyed by the pirate Alabama off Rio Janeiro; no date given.

Breadstuffs market dull and steady.

In another column will be found a couple of speeches of MR. CONGER—the first on Retrenchment, and the second on seconding Mr. EVANTREUL'S motion, "that the House regretted that a larger sum than $25,000 was not in the estimate for Colonization Roads for Lower Canada." With regard to the last we may say, that the Government satisfactorily expressed the reasons that induced it to give only $25,000 for Colonization purposes to each section for the present year. MR. HOLTON said:—

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the small sum proposed to be voted this session, ought not to be taken as an evidence on the part of Government of hostility to the opening up of the wild lands of the country by colonization roads. They had to deal with existing facts. There was no appropriation made at the ordinary time of the year for this purpose. The amount proposed to be voted was sufficient to cover all the expense that had been incurred this year. The year was nearly ended, and as Parliament would again be in session during the winter, there would then be ample time to vote all the money that might be thought necessary for next year. If it was his lot to offer the Estimates to Parliament for 1864, he promised that if hon gentlemen would award to him a generous measure of taxation, they would find him exceedingly generous towards all useful works of internal improvement. He had always been a warm friend of internal improvements; a friend of railways, canals, and every description of internal improvement. He quite agreed with the hon gentleman who had just sat down, that public moneys could not be appropriated to a more useful purpose than in opening up roads through the wild lands of the country.

THE U. S. NEW POSTAL CURRENCY.—The new postal currency will shortly be issued for the use of the public, and will be a most acceptable substitute for the worn and dirty bits of paper now in circulation. The ground work of the new fifty cent note is black, with a gilt stamp in the centre, surrounding the portrait of Washington. At the four corners and on each side of the head of Washington appear the figures "50," while "Fifty Cents" is inscribed above the figure of Washington, and "Fractional currency" is printed below. At the top are the words "Furnished only by the Assistant Treasurer and designated depositaries of the United States." At the bottom: "Receivable for all the United States stamps. Act approved March 3, 1863." The main part of the face is occupied with a picture of steamboats, locomotives, cotton bales, &c., very delicately shaded. The reverse of the fifty cent note is mainly red in color. A large "50" appears in the center of a shield. Around it are the words "Exchangeable for United States notes by the Assistant Treasurer and designated depositaries of U. S. in sums not less than three dollars. Receivable in payment of all dues to the United States less than five dollars, except customs." A very large "50" gilt in outline, also appears on the reverse.

NIAGARA FALLS.—The season at Niagara Falls, according to the Rochester Democrat, is gradually closing, and the visitors are gradually thinning out. The proprietors of all the hotels have this season done a flourishing business—one that has far exceeded their expectations. The International will be closed soon after the 1st of October, while the Cataract will be kept open during the winter. The American Hotel, which was burned last Spring, is rapidly re-building, and will be formally re-opened to the public some time in December.

Mr. Raymond the member elect for St. Hyacinthe, was yesterday introduced to the House by Hon. Mr. Cartier and Hon. J. A. Macdonald, and having subscribed to the oath, was admitted to take his seat.

ROWDYISM IN NORWOOD.

On the evening of Wednesday, the 30th ult., the sign and shop of Mr. C. WILSON, were daubed over in a most disgraceful manner with lampblack. The people in Norwood are very indignant at the mean and dastardly act; their indignation no doubt being greatly increased by their sympathy for Mr. WILSON who has suffered much from sickness in his family during the past summer. A reward of $40 has been offered for the apprehension and conviction of the guilty parties. It is thought that jealousy in business has had something to do with the matter.

In an affray between drunken men in a saloon in Toronto the other day, two men were stabbed and another severely bitten.

The Lower Province papers say that it is rumored that Mr Tilley, of New Brunswick, has been appointed a colonial Governor.

WE call attention to letters of W. CLUXTON and "H." in another column. We believe in letting our readers have both sides of a question. Our motto is, "Prove all things and hold fast to that which is good."

DISTANCES IN CHARLESTON HARBOR.—In the present juncture of affairs near Charleston, the following is of interest to the reader: Fort Sumter is three miles and three-eighths from Charleston, one mile and one-eighth from Fort Moultrie, three-quarters of a mile to the nearest land, one mile and three-eighths to Fort Johnson, and two miles and five-eighths to Castle Pickney. The last named fort is one mile from the town. These surveys are from surveys from the United States Coast Survey Department.

Mr. CONGER ON COLONIZATION.

MR. CONGER, in seconding the motion, said there was no hon gentleman but would admit that if the country was to be settled up rapidly, the wild land must be surveyed and the roads be constructed. If the present Government really intended to promote the interests of the country, they could not have neglected the opening up of roads as they had done in both sections of the Province during the past year. The $25,000 would be little more than sufficient to keep the roads already constructed in repair. It was no answer to say that the sum was as large as could be expended. It could be expended next spring. Money voted in March seldom reached its destination before August, whereas it could be expended to much better advantage earlier in the season. By the difficulties thrown in the way of emigrants, very little was being done, at present, in settling up the lands. The hon gentleman referred to the immense amount of arable land in rear of his own constituency, and expressed the hope that hon gentlemen representing well settled counties would not consider this a subject of no interest to them because they had no wild lands to open up. He was anxious for retrenchment as anybody, but if they expect to advance into the wilderness, and settle up the country, they must be willing to incur the expense of making roads on which settlers could go in. If the House could give the wealthy city of Toronto $18,000, it ought certainly to feel able to afford a larger expenditure for so important a purpose as this, which would pay so very large a dividend.

Mr. WOOD—Are all the lands lying on the Bobcaygeon Road sold?

Mr. CONGER—No. All the Crown Lands do not lie on that road. There are some fifteen Townships surveyed that are unsold.

Mr. WOOD said he wanted to know whether or not the lands already opened up by roads had all been settled. What was the use of opening up more roads if those already opened up were not one-quarter settled.

Mr. CONGER ON RETRENCHMENT.

Mr. CONGER said that he had listened with great attention to the arguments advanced by the gentleman occupying the Treasury Benches but he had been unable to discover any satisfactory reason why this item of $18,000 should not be struck from the Estimates. The law provided that each municipality having gaols to erect should have assistance to the extent of $6,000, and he contended it would be a great injustice to the counties, or cities in Upper Canada, and he must enter his solemn protest against giving the rich and populous city of Toronto four times as many as she was entitled to. Hon. gentleman opposite insisted that Toronto had a claim upon the Government for the payment of this sum. Well if they had let them show it, and it would, no doubt, be paid out of the proper fund, but it could not legally or justly be paid out of monies which belong to the rural municipalities.

did the wrong and unconstitutional act he complained of, by turning them out of office. And if he was dishonest and insincere in moving his amendment, he was totally unfit to be appointed a Judge of one of the highest Courts of the land. Which view is most acceptable? Does his course not look very much like an effort to compel the Government, by his opposition to them, to bring him off, and shut his mouth with the gift they conferred upon him. If the circumstances of this case will bear the impression of corruption, as I honestly believe they do, in Mr. Conger WRONG if he, believing as I do, and as many others do, that the precedent was a bad one, voted against it? Is a man to be pitied and called factious because he thinks for himself, and votes as his honest convictions dictates?

I will not trespass on your space more—I may have already trespassed too far—but I desire that our member should stand well with you. He went to Parliament unpledged, except to use his best endeavour for the benefit of his county in particular, and the country generally—and that he would not factiously oppose this or any other Government. And I believe he will not break those pledges, and that when he returns he will be able to offer his constituents such an account of his stewardship as will merit their approval.

I am,
Yours sincerely,

BY-LAW NO. 20.

A BY-LAW to authorise the issue of Debentures for the sum of Fourteen Hundred and Five Dollars, for the erection and furnishing of a School House, in the Village of Ashburnham, and for other purposes.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees of the Village of Ashburnham, have applied to the Corporation of the said Village, under the provisions of the Statute in that behalf, for authority to borrow the sum of money necessary for the erection of a School House, in the said Village, and for the purchase of Furniture therefor, and have furnished the said Corporation with an Estimate of the cost thereof, at the sum of Fourteen Hundred and Five Dollars, and have required the said Corporation to pass a By-Law authorising the issue of five Debentures for the following sums, and payable at the undermentioned dates:

One for $313.00,	payable	1st April, 1864.
One for 295.00,	"	1st April, 1865.
One for 280.00,	"	1st April, 1866.
One for 265.00,	"	1st April, 1867.
One for 253.00,	"	1st April, 1868.

With interest at the rate of six per cent., and providing and settling therein for levying an equal rate per annum, during each of such years, in addition to all other rates to be levied in each year, for the payment of the debt and interest: and that such Debentures shall be made payable to the said Board of School Trustees, or the bearer thereof, and be delivered to them for the purpose of and with authority to borrow thereon the necessary amount as aforesaid;

And Whereas, the total amount of the whole ratable property of the said Municipality, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is One Hundred and Fifty-two Thousand and Ninety-five Dollars;

And Whereas, the total amount required to be raised annually by special rate, for paying the said debt and interest is the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars, in each of the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867;

And Whereas, the annual special rate in the dollar for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for paying the principal of the said debt, according to law, is the sum of Four Cents and Three Mills in each of the said years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867;

And Whereas it is necessary and expedient to comply with the said application;

The Corporation of the Village of Ashburnham hereby enacts as follows:

I. That, for the purpose aforesaid, Five Debentures of the Corporation aforesaid, for the sums hereunder mentioned, and payable at the undermentioned dates, to the said Board of School Trustees, or bearer, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum:

One for $312,	payable	1st April, 1864.
One for 295,	"	1st April, 1865.
One for 280,	"	1st April, 1866.
One for 265,	"	1st April, 1867.
One for 253,	"	1st April, 1868.

be issued by the Corporation, all such Debentures to be made payable at the Office of the Treasurer in Ashburnham.

II. That the said Debentures, when issued, shall be sealed with the Seal of the said Corporation, and be signed by the head thereof.

III. That the said Debentures shall be delivered to the said Board of School Trustees, and disposed of by them for the purposes aforesaid, and for no other use or purpose whatever.

IV. That for paying the said debt and interest a special rate per annum of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar, be raised, levied and collected, on the assessed annual value of the whole ratable property for the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, in addition to all other rates, and paid over to the said Treasurer.

V. That this by-law shall take effect upon and from the date of the final passing thereof.

VI. That a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Saturday, the 31st day of October instant, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the forenoon.

TAKE NOTICE

That the above is a true copy of a proposed By-Law which will be taken into consideration by the Council of this Municipality, after one month from the first publication in the Peterborough Examiner, the date of which first publication was on Thursday, the eighth day of October, 1863: and the votes of the Electors of the said Municipality will be taken thereon, at the Town Hall of the said Village, on Saturday the thirty-first day of October instant, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Select Poetry.

HOME'S HARMONY.

The Lark may sing her sweetest song,
As rising from the waving corn,
On soaring wings she skims along
To welcome in the rising morn;
His sweetest song is naught to me,
Compared to home's sweet harmony.

Deep in the woods the nightingale,
At midnight hour may time her lay,
May pour upon the listening vale
Her loveliest streams of melody;
Lovely her midnight lay may be,
But lovelier home's sweet harmony.

Sweet [illegible] of the morning,
As [illegible] sing o'er my dell,
And autumn's feathered warblers sing
In rapturous strains their sweetest lays;
Lovely the songs of bower and tree,
But lovelier home's sweet harmony.

But oh, what cheers the winter night,
When all around is dark and gloom
When feathered songsters take their flight,
Or [illegible] gloomy little tomb?
'Tis such hours as this that we
Prize most our Home's sweet harmony.

Or, when dark clouds above us lower,
And life's dreariest winter o'er us comes,
To them we fly pour magic power,
To [illegible] our homes and homes,
[illegible] the lowering clouds do flee,
[illegible] home sweet harmony

Varieties.

Why is twice eleven like twice ten? Because twice eleven is twenty-two, and twice ten is twenty too.

AN INTERPRETER WANTED.—When Morgan Morgan was tried for sedition, Lord Justice-clerk Braxfield, who always talked broad scotch on the bench, said, "Ha's ye ony counsel, pan?" "No," De ye want ane he's ony objection?" "No, I only want an interpreter to make me understand what your lordship says. This was received with a burst of laughter of the whole court, in which his lordship heartily joined.

BREVITY IN BUSINESS.—A venerable pedagogue in the west, lately deceased, having required a supply of porter, entered the shop of a dealer in that commodity, when the following brief dialogue ensued: "Porter?" "Yes, sir." "Good"—"Yes, sir." "Six dozen."

THE FIVE H's.—Five of the sweetest words in the English language begin with H:—Heart, Hope, Home, Happiness, and Heaven. Heart is a hope-place, and home is a heart-place; and that man sadly mistakes who would exchange the happiness of home for anything less than heaven.

LAW AND ARMS.—An officer and a lawyer were talking of a chasterous battle. The former was lamenting the number of brave soldiers who fell on the occasion; when the lawyer observed that those who lived by the sword must expect to die by the sword.' 'By a similar rule,' replied the officer, 'those who live by the law, must die by the law.'

Tom Moore said to Peel, on looking at the picture of an Irish orator:

'You see the very quiver of his lip.'

'Yes,' said Peel,' and the arrow coming out of it.' Moore was afterwards telling this to one of his countrymen, who answered: 'He meant arrah coming out of it.'

PLUCK.—A young warrior in ancient times was observed to be seized with a sudden quaking and shivering all over his body; whereupon one asked him what the matter was. He replied, "My flesh creeps at the forethought of those dangers whereunto my undaunted and resolute spirit will certainly carry me."

'Hallo, there, how do you sell your weed?' 'By the cord.' 'Pshaw! how long has it been since you cut it?' 'No long'r than it is now.' 'See here, old fellow; you are too all-fired bright to live long.'

A POLITE MAN.—"My deceased uncle," says a humorous writer, "was the most polite man in the world. He was making a voyage on the Danube, and the boat struck. My uncle was just on the point of drowning. He got his head above water for once, took of his hat and said, 'Ladies and gentlemen, will you please excuse me' and down he went.

An Irishman, in describing America, said: "I am told that ye might roll England three st, an, wouldn't make a dint in the ground; there's fresh-water oceans inside that ye might dread old Ireland in; an' as for Scotland, ye might stick it in a corner an' ye'd never be able to find it out, except it might be the smell o' whiskey."

A professor asked an amateur performer, who appeared as if he never had seen the inside of a barbershop, why he wore his hair so long. "I have not a very good ear for music," said the amateur, "and if I should have my hair clipped the public would soon discover it."

HIGHLAND INDIGNATION.—"You are not more nor your clothes a gentleman, nor your fathers, too, for all the education you'll get: I'll spoke more grammar myself nor you both put in one, for all the fool you'll made of my language, Sir-ames MagSimpson, as tay'll call you, but it should have been MacImpudence: I'll jist told you in taw half of a moment, if you'll spoken one word more to make a spoyt of me, I'll knock you on the dyke arning Duncan Douglas's potatoes, down on your head whar you'll stand."

We are told to have hope and trust; but what is a poor fellow to do when he can no longer get trust?

A colonel was boasting that he had sprung from a high family in Ireland. "Yes," said a by-stander, "I have seen some of his family so high that their feet could not touch the ground."

BLACK MAN'S WIT.—A few days since, in Buffalo, a colored man who was asked why, as the white men were fighting about slavery he did not enlist,

'Did yer ebber see two dogs fightin,' ober a bone?' asked the colored man.

'Yes, to be sure I have,' replied the interrogator.

'Well, retorted the colored man, 'did yer ebber see the bone fight?'

A son of the Emerald Isle telling his adventures in America, said, 'the first feathered bird I ever saw in America, was a forkupine, I tryed him under a haystack, and shot him with a barn shovel; the first time I shot him I nailed him, and the second time I hit him where I missed him before.'

A fellow who has some music in his soul says the most cheerful and soothing of all fire-side melodies are the blended tones of a cricket, a tea kettle, a loving wife and the crowing of a baby.

An eminent divine preached one Sunday morning from the text. 'Ye are children of the devil, and in the afternoon, by a funny coincidence, from the words,' children obey your parents'

THE ALBION.

Established in 1822.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, published every Saturday Morning, in the City of New York, and devoted to News, Politics and General Literature. This old-established and popular Periodical is now supplied to the public at the rate of

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM,

OR SIX CENTS WEEKLY.

The Albion has been widely known for forty years throughout the United States and British North America. Thoroughly independent in tone, it will be found to combine all the elements of Home Journalism, with due attention to every American incident that is likely to bear on British interests.

The Literary Department

will be enriched as heretofore, with the cream of English Literature. In connection with Art the ablest criticism will continue to be published in its columns. To these are added such Editorial Notices of current events as are deemed to be of interest to a circle of intelligent readers, whether British or American. The Albion furnishes, it is believed, a valuable weekly budget of Information and entertainment.

THE ALBION ENGRAVINGS.

We have on hand copies of the Albion Engravings for subscribers and others can be furnished with them—at $3 each to subscribers and $3 to non-subscribers. A few proof copies of the Florence Nightingale print on India paper may be had. The following engravings are also on hand:

Chalon's Queen Victoria, Lucs's Prince Albert, Allan's Sir Walter Scott, Stuart's Washington, Matthew's Benjamin Franklin, Cope's First Trial by Jury, Buchler's St. Paul's London, Portrait of General Havelock, Herring's Three Members of the Temperance Society, The Castle of Ischia from Stanfield's Picture, Wandsdorf's Mary Queen of Scots, Landseer's Return from Deer Hunting, Landseer's Dignity and Impudence, Landseer's Dear Pets, Dr. Kane at the Graves of Sir John Franklin's Men, Wilkies, Columbus propounding his Theory of a New World, and the Falls of Niagara from an original drawing made for the Albion.

Engravings can be safely forwarded by mail or express, on paste-board roller, at a charge of a few cents.

Money may be transmitted in registered letters at the risk of the office.

Subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces have to pay 26 cents per annum for American Postage.

Herrick's Sugar Coated Pills,

CHILDREN CRY FOR THEM!

THIS remarkable Universal remedy is carrying the world by storm. Over five million boxes are sold annually. Composed entirely of Flowers, Roots, Balsams and Extracts,—their effect on the human system is pleasant satisfactory and successful. Acting directly on the blood, nerves, solids and fluids of the body, their use is attended with the happiest effects. In nine-tenth attacks of diseases one or two doses almost always cures. In old standing cases of six months small doses repeated frequently—as directed—restore the system to good health in the result. No change in employments or diet is necessary. They never cause sore mouths, swelled joints, aching limbs, or do many other kinds. They are warranted to give satisfaction or the money will be refunded. They are considered cheaper, safer, prettier, and in all respects superior to any purgative pill in the world.

DRIFTING AWAY.

O, where are the faces all beaming with joy,
And smiling with mirth and glee,
That gathered around me when I was a boy,
And shared all their pleasure with me?
Alas! in their barques, on the Ocean of Life
Some tossed by the tempest are they;
In fancy I see them amid the hard strife,
Drifting away, drifting away!

O, where are the dreams of my youthful delight,
Of honor, and glory, and fame,
That gleamed awhile on my dazzled sight,
And passed like a meteor's flame? [of time
Though pleasing, yet short was their stay,
How withered, I see them in memory's clime
Drifting away! drifting away!

O, where are the friendships of days gone by
That promised such pleasures and joy?
All freely they came, and how little dreamed I
That ought could their beauty destroy.
But they, too, have gone; all withered from sight;
To doubt and fierce scandal a prey,
And now from my heart their genial light
Is drifting away, drifting away!

'Tis thus when we travel the journey of life,
We're harrassed by sorrow and care,
But there is a land where troubles are rife—
No pain to the wanderer there. [abode,
And when we have reached that blissful
Its joys all our pains will repay; [head,
We then will gaze back on life's troubled
Drifting away, drifting away.

Miscellaneous News.

Thomas Elliott's Speculations.

(Concluded.)

Mr. Grigg shook hands without at all meaning to. He was badly upset. He had fully intended to administer a mild but firm reproof, and though he had been paving the way to it very skilfully; and now he found himself suddenly thrown on the defensive by the manner and the language of the young man. Thus there jumbled about in his mind an incongruous mess of satisfaction at the discontinuance of Tom's visits, dissatisfaction at losing him, irritation at being talked to, and that reproving state of mind that he had been nursing. And between the humbug sentiments which he had been meaning to express without feeling them, and these genuine sentiments which he had not expected to feel and did not mean to express, he mumbled and gobbled in his talk quite pitifully. The rich but vulgar New York merchant is seldom a great extempore orator of the feelings.

'Good-morning!' said he; 'good-morning, then, Elliott!—Ah hem!—Ah'm!—I'm sorry—I'm glad—I hope that in future—It's very improper—It's very improper Well, just as you say—I'm sure—I was intending—Very well—very well!'

And with this lucid exposition of the moral bearings of things in general Tom left. After he was gone Big Grigg very quickly and naturally heated up into a very great rage. Why should he not? He had been cause! to look ridiculous—to himself, at least; and in about fifteen minutes he agreed with himself, with more heartiness of determination than accuracy in costume, that he would 'sit in that young puppy's skirts. Just so sure,' he said, with a ludicrous habitual assertion of his, which wasn't meant to be true but sometimes was—'just as sure as I'm a goose!'

'Young-puppy,' he said, and Tom was a well-grown fellow of twenty-four. But he had risen up under the eyes of Pig Grigg for ten years, and we seldom see the growth that goes on before our eyes. The old gentleman had, in fact, never thought of Tom as a man, and had therefore felt toward him as an impertinent boy—a false position which had really exposed him to be outflanked, as he actually was in the conversation just recited.

Tom felt the same state of things; indeed he had long felt it. As he left the store he said to himself, 'Can't an old man believe any body can be less than fifty years of age and more than fifteen?'

Thomas Elliott, thus cast loose from the social and financial ties of so many years, roamed meditatatively along the sidewalk of South Street, gliding with the instinct of the experienced New Yorker through knots, tangles, eddies, whirlpools of hurrying men that would have swamped a countryman, with half-unconscious feet turned Burling Slip, and by Liberty and Nassau streets rambled into Wall Street—having no particular business before his appointment at eleven, when he was to meet his friend; intending to hold sweet converse with him, if he could; and at any rate to have a good deliberate lunch with him at noon, within the gastronomic retreat of the William Street Delmonic. This friend was one Jaggles, a man of considerable culture, immense business energy and shrewdness, and much good-nature too; a friend of Tom's for some time, and already managing Tom's small means to the joint profit of both. His business, in which Tom was to join, was 'General Speculating'—if you know what that is. The general speculator must have all his money ready at any moment, and some credit; must be ready to say Yes instantaneously, and No ten times quicker; must be ready to buy and sell any thing in the world except his wife and children; and is equally likely, on any given day, to be the exulting owner of a cargo of bananas and oranges, a monkey and barrel-organ, a 'job lot' of gilt-edged Bibles, a pile of calicoes 'warranted fast colors,' a new patent, or of the ordinary commodities of real estate, stock, bonds, scrip, or 'good business paper.'

As Tom, having turned eastward again, passed deliberately by that curious silent cul-de-sac, or 'vermiform process,' known as Jauncey Court, he was met by one in extreme haste, who seized him unceremoniously, and whispered, in an eager voice,

'Step in here a moment!'

'Ah! Mr. Wickwire,' said Tom, 'how goes it?'

But Wickwire—an old fellow in the broking line, a frequent coadjutor of Mr. Grigg in speculations—was in too much haste to be polite. He hauled Tom violently within the quiet precinct of the Court, and hurridly whispered in his ear the words.

'New Orleans is open! They're past the forts!'

Tom stared. "How do you know?'

'Private dispatch through Hebbles at Richmond, not Baltimore,' replied Wickwire. 'Fully reliable! City taken yesterday! Be all over town to-morrow—perhaps this afternoon! We're just got today! See?'

Thomas Elliott thought he did. This dry old broker, with his score of hasty words, set up a great golden image in the young man's brain; whose glow, however, to do justice to him, did by no means obscure the rosy and more celestial light of that other lovelier figure hard by the yellow one! And no matter whether or not it would have been more chivalrous to run straightway back and tell Pig Grigg, as old Wickwire expected. Business is business. Every man for himself! Besides, Master Tom may have thought, 'If I make it for Lily—' In fact, he undoubtedly did.

But all this flashed through his mind in one instant.

'I do see!' he cried. 'Big thing, Mr. Wickwire!'

And he staid not upon the order of his going, but jumped forth out of Jauncey Court as if he had been shot out, and sped furiously eastward toward the Exchange, leaving old Wickwire to find out for himself why Mr. Grigg should fail to communicate with him. Past the exchange flew Thomas, short round into a small, dim, dingy, comfortless little cellar of an office, where wrote like lightning at a dirty desk a high-dried, hungry-faced man, all steel and whalebone.

'Howdo?' he snapped, as Elliott plunged in.

'All right!' replied Tom, as quickly. 'Jaggles, I must have every cent! And there's an immense chance! Honor bright now; if you like it go in! Shall it be all on the square between us?'

Jaggles looked at him a moment and seemed affected with the young man's enthusiasm. His level busy eyebrows moved a little above his keen steel-gray eyes. He smiled, jumped up, struck his hand into Elliott's, and with the same intense swift utterance said,

'Alloathesquare! honorbright! how'llyou have it? Whatis't!'

'In bank—check it all out again, What's the figure?'

The speculator looked into his pocket-memorandum, and answered,

'Eightyfivetwentythreenaught.'

That is, $8523—all Elliott was worth.

'You'll go $15,000 or $20,000 if worth while, won't you, besides credits?' asked Tom.

'Private news, and sure—New Orleans is open!'

Jaggles stared at Tom; but his stare quickly spread into a smile of intense satisfaction.

'I'm your man Elliott! The Superior is not chartered. I'll secure her instantly. Flour and provisions. She'll carry—never mind; all we want to send. We must work like beavers though. That cargo must be going in there all night. Grigg—?'

'Left him this morning,' said Tom. 'Got the news half an hour after.'

'He'll be after us in short order,' said Jaggles.

'Let him,' said Tom.

They briefly conferred upon the character and nature of their respective purchases. That done,

'Jump now, you beggar!' cried Jaggles, 'I'll see to the steamer. Come here at five.'

Off they went; and a good deal of stir they made that day among the flower and grocery men.

They met at five, as per agreement.

'All right!' sang out Jaggles. 'The breadstuffs are flying into the old Superior as if she had a real appetite. Tell you what! Betwixt buying one day in advance in the New York market, and selling in that empty New Orleans market, it's the neatest thing of the season!'

'Yes,' said Tom. 'And did you by chance meet squire Grigg in your travels?'

'Some,' answered the slangy speculator. "He has been flying about this burg after the manner of a bee in a tar-bucket.' And Mr. Jaggles laughed. 'It's unfortunate, but my charter-party was signed about two minutes before he came into the steamer office. He offered me $5000 for my bargain. I was not at leisure to negotiate. He's got the Sea Dragon, though, he and Wickwire. But she can't finish discharging before to-morrow or next day morning.'

'I met him up by the Corn Exchange,' quoth Tom, demurely. 'He turned so red! I think he can't have heard from Wickwire until one or two o'clock. Says he, 'Elliott, I'll pay you for using that news against me, you ungrateful rascal, as sure as I'm a goose!' I told him I should have stepped round with the information, but I had not time; and he grew too angry to say one other word. Let's go and get some dinner.

And they went.

It war four days later. The news had rung all over the North of that terrible glory of fire and blood through which our brave soldiers bore the old Flag in triumph back to its place over New Orleans; and while it thrilled and palpitated in the arteries of New York, the nose of commerce trued with all their might to see the white gleam of dollars through the red glare of victory. But Elliott and Jaggles were before Grigg and Wickwire, and they of all the rest of the crowd of shippers to the new port. With triumph swiftness the barrels and bales and boxes trundled down the wharves, and swung up over the lofty black sides of the Superior and the Sea Dragon, and disappeared in their great dark holds. The incessant labor of day and night gangs rapidly filled up the steamers; and now the time draws nigh for the Superior's clearance to be granted by the scribes of the Custom-house, and Jaggles is writing like lightning, as he always does, in his dreary alcove in Hanover Street. To him enter Thomas Elliott in a blaze of unpleasant excitement, scarce able to keep his feet on the floor for temper; all but dancing with disgust.

'Jag!' he sings out, 'they've detained her on suspicion of contraband. Bastay says he's sorry; and I believe he is. But he says that, under the information he has, she must discharge cargo. It's ruin, Jaggles! We're played out!'

At Elliott's first words the speculator sat bolt upright and stopped writing. As Tom went on, his broad sallow forehead flushed faintly, his heavy eyebrows gathered doom, his dull eyes grew brighter, and he replied.

'I perceive the hand of Jeab in this thing. Grigg and Wickwire have done that.' Then he paused a moment, and added, 'It certainly hurts me but we can save discharging, I thing.'

He hastily explained his plan to Tom. In pursuance of it they were both to work like madmen; procured strong indorsements from three eminent commanders, who were influential politicians, just then in camp near by with their brigades, and knew the Collector. They also procured full lists of each separate purchase for shipment; and a memorandum of the politics and businessstanding of each seller. Armed with this formidable mass of documents, they spent parts of a day and a half with good-natured Collector Barney, and at last succeeded in convincing him how unreasonable was the accusation that had wrought them so much woe. The clearance was granted; and, for various reasons, they spent no time in tracing out their slanderer. But when the facts were first loose, and the vast bulk of the Superior moved slowly away from the dock, the Sea Dragon had been rushing on under a full drag of steam for about thirty hours. Jaggles insisted on going out as supercargo, and on leaving Tom as his deputy at home.

It was four weeks more before Tom heard a word about his venture. The letter that Jaggles wrote is too characteristic not to be given in full; besides, it contains certain information about our story not elsewhere found:

"NEW ORLEANS, May 30, 1862.

"MY BOY,—Not to confound figures of speech with figures of arithmetic, see in the first place the sum-totals of the inclosed account-sales, as per which take notice that our speculation is a grand success. I get most; but I'm oldest. You get enough.

'Such larks! as J. Gargery hath it. Also remember the case of the unprincipled gentleman in the Psalm:

"He digged a pit, he digged it deep,
He digged it for his brother;
But for He sin he tumbled in
The pit he made for t'other.'

'Such my hearer, was the little fate of our brethren, Grigg and Wickwire. All the voyage out I groaned to think of their skimming the cream off that market. When we hauled up to the levee I spied gunboats, 'darks,' Zouaves, secesh, blue uniforms, all sorts of things except Sea Dragons. It can't be possible, said I, that she's discharged and gone! But not a bit of it. We were first cargo. And if it hadn't been for that excessive tenderheartedness of mine, I really don't know but I should have sold the goods for their weight in specie. All the while I was gathering in the specie I was saying, What's become of the Sea Dragon! for my kind heart was stirred within me. Well, after almost a week she came crawling along. She caught some heavy weather; and besides, gayest of all! she ran aground in one of those blessed keys up in the West Indies somewhere (overhaul your Atlas, and, when found, make a note of), and staid in that delightful and satisfactory spot (to which I mean to make a pilgrimage when I have time, with boiled pease in my shoes, secundam artem). One Week! I was so tickled, and am yet, that I want you to run up and kiss Grigg, and Wickwire too, and charge same to my account.

'Well, it's all right. Every thing comes out right, if you only wait long enough! Another thing. I'm earning other moneys under the clause in the charter-party about keeping the steamer six months, etc. I shall stay and come back in her. Yours truly, JAGGLES."

When, a few days after the receipt of this letter, Thomas Elliott called upon Pig Grigg, that worthy gentleman received him with considerable stiffness. But business is business; and Tom had some business propositions to make. Besides, it is a fact that if Abijah had realized that Tom was a man he would have been far less uncivil. It required this squall of disagreement to clear up the atmosphere of their relations to each other; and Tom's absence had proved his value, and his successful speculation had shown him well able to 'paddle his own canoe.' Neither of them raked up any past offences, and the junior gentleman first exhibited to the senior the state of his bank account, and then proposed himself to him for a junior partnership. It is a fact that both interlocutors thought of another proposition, involving a young lady; but they spoke not of it. Mr. Grigg opened his eyes at Tom's cash account; and said he would think of the partnership plan; he did think of it; agreed to it.

After all Pig Grigg has a good deal of kindness in his old pecuniary heart—to a successful business man. For he never said one word at home about the matters in hand until one night, when it was all arranged, he took Tom home, hauled him into the parlor, bawling out, with pretended gruffness,

'Here, mother! here, Lil! here's that impertinent Elliott agagin!' and heartily enjoying the prim, cold, sour phiz of his spouse, and the blushing perplexity of Lily. So did that mischievous Tom himself.

For all that Mrs. Grigg is a capital mother-in-law, because Tom keeps her in good order when she comes to see Mrs. Lily Elliott.—Harpers Magazine.

A BRAVE ENGINEER.

George D——— was running the express, and was some thirty minutes behind time. My freight train was on the switch waiting for him to pass. He came in sight about 35 miles an hour, as near as I could judge, and I was watching him all the time. He was about three times the length of the train off the switch—when I saw, and he saw, the switchrods ran madly out of the shanty, grab the switch, and turn it so that it might lead him to the hind end of my train. I jumped, instinctively, to start my engine—heard him whistle for brakes. And those who stood near said that he reversed his engine—but my train was too heavy to move quickly, and he was too near to do much by reversing, so I soon felt a heavy concussion, and knew that he had struck hard, for, at the other end of forty-five cars, it knocked me down and the jar broke my engine loose from the train. He might have jumped from his engine with comparative safety, after he saw the switch changed, for the ground was sandy there and free from obstructions, and he could easily have jumped clear of the track, and escaped with slight bruises. But no, behind him, trusting to him, and resting in comparative security, were hundreds to whom life was as dear as to him; his post was the head; to the greater law of self preservation; that most people put first in their code of practice, his stern duty required him to forswear all allegiance, and to act on the principle of "others first, myself afterwards." So, with a brave heart such as is seldom found in other ranks of men, he stuck to his iron steed, transformed him into the white steed of death, and spent the last energies of his life, the strength of his last pulse, striving to mitigate the suffering which would follow the collision.—His death was instantaneous, he had no time for regrets at leaving life and the friends he loved so dearly. When we found him one hand grasped throttle, his engine was reversed, and with the other he still held on to the sand box lever.—The middle and lower portion of his body was crushed, his head and arms were untouched, and his face still wore a resolute, self-sacrificing expression, such as must have lit up the countenance of Arnold Winkered, when crying, "Make way for Liberty," he threw himself upon a sheet of Austrian spears and broke the columns of his enemy.

RAILWAYS.

In the year 1814 Stephenson's "Puffing Billy" was first put upon the Killingworth Track. Although the triumph of the engineer was complete, it was not until 1830 that the locomotive was run upon the railroad to carry passengers from Liverpool to Manchester, the two cities first connected by steam. The removal of scientific difficulties was not all that was necessary. Many prejudices against the locomotive were to be subdued. Farmers feared that it would startle cows from the pastures, and dukes that it would frighten game from the covers; sportsmen thought that birds would be poisoned by its smoke, and landlords that houses would be fired by its sparks; physicians too afied that hearing might be injured by the peal of the engine, and eyesight by its glare; that the general health would be impaired by the tunnels through which it passed, while the mind as well as the body would suffer from its unnatural speed. Politicians protested against the monopoly that railways would create, dangerous to the public peace, detrimental to the public welfare, and perilous to the popular liberties. Editors exclaimed against the fanaticism of the scientific fools, and compared the proposed traveling by steam to firing people off from congreve rockets. A learned candidate for office demonstrated the impossibility of starting a locomotive against a gale of wind; while stage-drivers, mail contractors, and innkeepers forewarned capitalists against the bursting of the railroad bubble. No wander that the poor people were goaded to madness by their leaders and armed themselves with pitchforks to resist the new invasion of popular institutions, and that the great inventor was threatened with ducking whenever he showed himself near a pond. Indeed, the opposition to railways was about as reasonable as that we now see to emancipation.

What do we now behold? The following table gives the length and cost of the railroads of the world:—

	Length	Cost.
America	36,306	$1,140,312,253
Europe	35,108	4,461,910,521
Asia	2,870	237,760,000
Australasia	462	89,660,333
Africa	252	21,900,000
Total world	74,998	$6,264,542,807

Those of the United States are as follows:—

	Length	Cost.
New England	3,737	$147,359,[illegible]
Middle States	7,528	268,967,[illegible]
Northern Central States	1,823	457,[illegible]
Southern Central States	4,647	132,2[illegible]
Southern Atlantic States	5,156	124,0[illegible]
Pacific States	904	4,100,000
Total United States	32871	$1234862[illegible]

The above enumerations are exclusive of city passenger railroads.

The railway companies of Great Britain alone employ over 100,000 men, representing a population of 500,000 souls. The journeys performed in that kingdom have increased at the rate of about ten millions a year. Many of the trains move at a velocity which is one-sixth that of a cannon ball shot from a piece of artillery.—N. Christain Advocate.

ALEX. GRAHAM.

Peterborough, October 14th, 1863.

MR. CONGER.

Our Representative seems to have joined himself, body and soul, to the Corruptionists, who, for months past in Parliament, have have been obstructing public business, to gratify their own party whims, thereby imposing great additional expense upon the country. In fact, he has cut quite a figure in this kind of work. The chiefs of the party have comparatively kept in the back ground. Indeed, Mr. Conger on the Galt motion distinctly stated, that he had lost all confidence in the present administration—the inference being, that it was his determination to oppose it on every occasion in the future, as he had done in the past. The people of this County will please mark this. Mr. Conger said, he would be wanting in his duty to his constituents and the country at large if he did not record his vote for the (Galt's) motion. All we have got to say about the matter is, if Mr. Conger should again appeal to the voters of the County of Peterborough for their suffrages, he will find out to his cost whether or not he has been in his duty to his constituents. "H." in his letter of last week, said that Mr. Conger had declared privately and publicly, that he would offer no factious opposition to the present ministry, and then went on to defend the several votes given by Mr. Conger. We submit it however, to an impartial and intelligent public to say whether the whole course of the Opposition (whose man Friday Mr. Conger has been throughout) has not, since the opening of the present Session, under the circumstance, been factious in the extreme? So much so, that one of their number, Mr. O'Halloran, evidently a man of good sense, and some parts, became so disgusted that he crossed the floor to support the ministry, although entering Parliament strongly opposed to it. He declared non-confidence motions fit breakfast, dinner and supper were too much for his digestion—more than he could stand or would stand. Hence, he felt it his duty to support the administration. We think Mr. O'Halloran's conduct stands in honorable contrast to that of our member whose political digestion has proved so strong that he has swallowed everything however dirty or indigestible the opposition have offered him. Had Mr. Conger acted as Mr. O'Halloran, he would have been the most popular man in the County of Peterborough—his former faults and failings would have been forgotten. As it is now, with the exception of one or two personal friends, no one thinks of trying to defend the very indefensible, and (because of his promises) very reprehensible course he has pursued since the second (and we think we may safely say last) time he has become our representative.

It may be, that when Mr. Conger makes his appearance among us, that he may be able to give some reasons for his very singular course; but we very much doubt it. We know that he grounds much of his opposition on the non-section of the Government with regard to the Colonization Roads. As we said in our last issue, we again say, the Government satisfactorily explained its reasons for the comparatively small grant of the present year. As we have touched upon the subject, a word or two would not would not be out of place.

We suppose that most are aware that during former governments a grant of $100,000 was given to each of the Provinces for Colonization purposes; that is to say, that Upper Canada, which contributes about 75 per cent. of the revenue, got precisely the same sum that Lower Canada received, which only contributes 25 per cent. This was wonderfully fair play, indeed (?) The injustice of this we pass for the present. But this is not all. Under the regime of the Cartier-Macdonald government it is notorious that this money was used to promote personal or party purposes. Indeed, the member of the County, if an adherent of that ministry, decided how it should be spent. He, no doubt, took proper care that it should subserve, as far as possible, the interests of himself and his political masters. That this was so in Lower Canada some of the Lower Canadian oppositionists did not hesitate to confess. That it was so in our section we know from experience. Incapables were appointed at large salaries, and the money otherwise squandered in a manner that no practical or beneficial result in any way adequate to the expenditure could possibly be derived from it. Hence the necessity of some change in the way of doing business. We hope, therefore—as it no doubt will—that the Government will devise some scheme by which this state of things will be swept away, and the country will derive the full benefit of the money granted by the Legislature. We think, too, Mr. Conger who all will admit, has had considerable experience in bank country matters, would have better studied those interests which he professes to have so much at heart, by giving the administration of the day a fair support; when, no doubt, it would have been happy to avail itself of any knowledge or experience Mr. Conger might have wished to impart. Mr. Conger, in acting as he has done, has got astraddle the wrong horse altogether.

ENGLISH PRESS ON CANADA.

However much the Corruptionist press may denounce the present Ministry, and attempt to hold it up for all that is bad, extravagant and impotent; and however much they may laud the palmy days of the Cartier-McDonald Ministry, it is quite evident that the English press—which every one here will surely concede to be quite as disinterested, and quite as able to form correct opinions—do not think at all with them. In a late number we referred to an article from the London Times, reflecting very severely upon the coalition Ministry, and urging upon Canadians the necessity of rallying to sustain the present Administration. If the the London Times is not always in right in Canadian matters, it was right then. So the London News in an article upon the political crisis in the British Colonies, discusses the present condition and prospects of Canadian affairs. It congratulates the country upon its deliverance from the coalitions Ministry, and shows the difficulties the present Administration has had to encounter. The Ministry, it says, has at once to meet to requirements, either of which would at any time task its ability in no ordinary degree. On the one hand, it has had to encounter a serious deficiency in the public revenue, a deficiency not traceable to any sudden or unforseen demand on the Treasury of the Province, but the result of a course of policy persisted in for a long period by previous ministers. For several years there has been a steadily increasing annual deficit, which this year will be as great as ever. The exigency can only be met by the imposition of new taxes; and the present Ministers in their appeal to the country laboured under the disadvantage of including that unpopular policy in their programme, whilst their most formidable opponents, the members of the late Government, were known as the authors and agents of a system of lavish expenditure alimented by loans and similar expedients. On the other hand, Ministers have been strongly pressed by the Imperial Government to spend large sums of money for purposes of colonial defence, and this at a time when no one can tell how the equilibrium of ordinary income and expenditure is to be restored. The Corruptionists never look at things in this light; it does not suit to do so. That the Provincial credit would not be improved by the return to power of the Cartier-Macdonald Government is evidenced by the language of the same Journal which says: "There is too "much reason to fear from the past that "their return to power would be the re-"opening of the era of government by in-"terests, and a renewal of the frightful "jobbery which has brought so much dis-"credit on the colony." Not very complimentary or flattering certainly, but brimming with truth. On the Opposition plan of denouncing the Ministers for want of loyalty the News remarks: "Nothing can "be more reckless and factious than these "tactics." "The charge of disloyalty," it continues, "is even more dangerous to the "general interests. Unquestionably, the "present Ministers have gained the confi-"dence of a great majority of the intelligent "Protestants of Upper Canada, and to re-"present that they are indifferent to the "maintenance of the British connection is "the way to encourage attempts to weaken "and destroy it." This language is to the point, and should be well studied by those who are so wide-mouthed in their cry of disloyalty. The News does full justice to the spirit and success of the measure introduced by the Ministry for the defence of the Province. Such articles cannot but do good at home and abroad.

THE GALT MOTION.

The agony is over. The great Galt motion—which it was boasted throughout the country would oust the ministry, came to a vote on Friday last, when the ministry was again sustained by a majority of 3—61 being for the motion and 64 against it. The country is safe, and the corruptionists are in despair. The conduct of the opposition, during the three days debate, was on a par with that which has marked them during the whole session. They shirked the vote as long as they possibly could, thus wasting the valuable time of many of the members, and entailing increased expenses upon the Province. The members of the Ministry have every reason to congratulate themselves upon their victory. So ought the country generally. The whole Opposition, no boubt, feel much disappointed; but there is, as the Quebec Mercury very pertinently says, "one section of the Opposition whose mem-"bers must expessence more than common "mortification. I allude to those members "who got into Parliament by professions of "independence, if not of actual friendliness "to the Goverament, and who afterwards "allied themselves to the Opposition, under "an expectation that their votes would turn "the scales. The Belleroses, and Bowns, "and Cartwrights, and Cockburns, and "Conkers, and Knights, of the House no "doubt feel small enough, just now, to creep "into a mouse-hole, if one were accessible. "They forgot their promises, and crossed "the floor firmly persuaded that they held "the fate of the Ministry in their hands. "They were to kill the Government and be "great men in consequence! Events have "taught them, however, that the Govern-"ment can hold its position and carry on "its work without their help. We venture "to say that they would give a trifle, this "morning to be forgotten."

HAMILTON DEBT BILL.

This Bill, to which we referred in a late number, and which passed the Lower House has been virtually killed in the Upper House. House. Hon. Mr. McCrea moved as an amendment to the original Bill, that it should not go into operation till approved by all its creditors. This was carried by 24 to 17. We think that the Lords have done credit to themselves, and, at the same time, saved the credit of the Province. It is to be hoped that the Hamiltonians, now that their city is again showing all its old signs of prosperity, will see the necessity of adopting some measures of discharging its just liabilities. If a city is extravagant, it is hardly right outsiders should be made to suffer. We feel convinced, if a number of its substantial citizens would take hold of the matter as they ought, they could soon put the city in a position that would alike preserve its reputation untarnished, and rescue it from the incubus now pressing so heavily on its energies.

THE REVIEW.

OUR VOLUNTEERS.

The Review at Toronto on Thursday last, according to all accounts,—as far as the appearance of the troops and the number of the spectators were concerned—was a brilliant affair, and fully met the expectations of its promoters. The number of troops—Volunteers and Regulars—was over 4000. It is estimated that 20,000 spectators were on the ground witnessing the spectacle. General Lindsay, at the close, complimented the Volunteers highly on their soldierly appearance, and on the manner in which the different military movements were executed. The committee of Management, however, do not seem to have attended to matters—as regards the reception of the guests—as well as the Brantford Committee. For instance, Peterborough sent two Companies, and Ashburnham one; these in order to reach Toronto had to start on the day previous; word was sent to the Secretary of the Committee to that effect, and requesting him to provide accommodation for them for the night. On the arrival of "our" Volunteers in Toronto, late at night, a letter was put in the hands of Captain Poole, from the Secretay, stating that accommodation had been provided at the Commercial Hotel. Thither then many of them marched; but when they got there, they found that no arrangements had been made with the proprietor, and that he was unable to accommodate them for the night. They had, therefore, to pass the night the best way the could; some stretched themselves on the floor in the bar-room—others roamed the street; while a number with Capt. Poole, bied to the St. Lawrence Hall, in which the Captain by arousing the Mayor about three o'clock in morning, and making known to him how things stood, had obtained permission to rest his men for the few hours that intervened to day-light. The b'hoys were not very well pleased with this treatment, and even hinted that they would not attend the Review; but we are happy to say that they did not allow personal feelings to damp their enthusiasm, or interfere with their doing all in their power to contribute to the brilliancy and effectiveness of the display. All speak in high terms of courtesy of the citizens generally, and of the members of the Managing Committee individually. We are sorry, therefore that things were not better arranged When people come from a distance, at considerable expense and loss of time, on an invitation to take a part in a thing, they like to see some appreciation, on the part of their hosts, of what they have done.

THAT $18,000 ITEM.

The Corruptionist journals are trying to make great capital out of the $18,000 item for the alteration of the Toronto jail. A whole evening was taken up in discussing it. We are told it was a bribe to the Toronto people, and that to obtain the Toronto representatives support the ministry is willing to rob the rest of the country. But this all bosh. The fact is, that the $18,000 item in the estimates was a debt incurred by the Cartier-Macdonald government, and which the present ministay thought it to be its duty to pay. A Government must discharge the liabilities incurred by its predecessors, no matter under what circumstances; a bad ministry leaves its slimy trail behind, and through its misdeeds its successor has to do many things which it would not otherwise entertain the idea of doing. So with the Toronto jail item. The present ministry would never have dreamt of introducing such an estimate if it had not been forced to do so by the action of the Cartier-Macdonald government, which sanctioned the original plans of the jail, and which sent an Inspector of its own, who ordered these plans to be altered; the said government having promised to pay for these alterations. What then has the present ministry done but a simple act of justice in the course it has pursued. It has only done what every honest and well meaning man would have done under similar circumstances, however much opposed to the principle of such grants. When the present ministry makes such grants and pays them, it will be time enough to find fault. Its desire and effort to uphold and maintain the honor and good faith of the Government (abstractly considered) should not surely be construed into flagrant corruption or some other heinous sin, that the Corruptionists cannot find words black and expressive enough to name.

TOWN COUNCILLORS.

Mr. T. Douglas, on Tuesday last, was elected Councillor in the place of the late J. Dixon, Esq., over his opponent, Mr. Hamilton, by a majority of 11 votes. We think Mr. Douglas will make a very good Councillor; but we are very much inclined, also, to think our Councillors will not be a great deal troubled with Municipal duties this year, if they continue as they are now. The Council seems at a deal lock. There has not been a meeting of the last five or six weeks; and there is no prospect of one, till Mr. Carlyle returns. Such a state of things is extremely undesirable, and very injurious to the interests of the Town. The causes of it we do not intend discussing at present; but we think it should impress upon the mind of voters the importance of taking care whom they elect. Indeed, in our humble opinion, it is of more importance to them—directly or immediately—who are our Town Councillors than it is who is our Member. They have much business in their hands to do, and upon their doing this well, depend, in a great measure, the Town's prosperity and the development of its energies. It is perfectly absurd to elect incompetent persons, or those whose interest in the Town is not as strong as that in their own affairs. Men may be all that is required in a private capacity, but may not possess, in the slightest degree, the requisites necessary in those who have important and complicated matters to attend to. They are good enough citizens, but make poor Councillors. We hope voters will think over this matter; if they do, the few hints contained in these few remarks will not have been thrown out in vain.

GEORGE STREET.

We think that the Bridge on the side walk at the North end of George Street, as well as some other parts of the side walk a little further up, might profitably employ the attention of the Street Inspector for a little while. Perhaps the Town Council never go so far North.

We would remind our readers that the Otonabee Tea Meeting takes place to-night. A pleasant and interesting time is promised. 25 cents cannot be better spent.

DENMARK.

Another war seems brewing in Europe. At the late German Diet it was decided that the Schleswig-Holstein question, which has been so long in agitation, should be settled. The King of Denmark and the German Diet, seem to hold different views on the matter. The former thinks that the latter have no right to interfere with his subjects. It will be remembered that in 1848 there was a disturbance between the King and his refractory subjects of the Duchies, who wished to secede and who were aided by Prussia and Austria. This was settled by the King promising to make certain concessions. Ever since the people have complained to the Diet that this has not been done—hence the appointment of the Committee referred to, and the recommendation to employ force against the Danish King. Should the Diet attempt to carry out the recommendation of the Committee, it is almost impossible to tell to what complications it may lead. It seems certain, however, that Denmark may depend upon the support of England, France and Sweden. With these powers at his back, one may infer that he has not much to fear.

JAPAN.

Hostilities have commenced in this part of the world. The two governments—that of the Tycoon, the temporal ruler; and that of Mikado, the spiritual ruler—seem to be strongly opposed to each other—the former being not unfavourable to strangers; the latter altogether so. The Diamos, or nobles, agree with the Mikado, and are bitterly hostile to foreigners. The Tycoon Government complied with the demands of the English Government upon it, and paid £110,000 of indemnification for the murder of Richardson; but only three hours after, a proclamation was issued ordering foreigners to leave the country. This, it avers, it was compelled to do under compulsion. Several vessels have been attacked, but the Tycoon Government disowns the act—blaming the Diamos, who have retired to their principalities. Several places have been stormed and taken; and, from the news we have, we may expect to hear of hot work—as it appears to be a general determination on the part of the Diamos to resist the foreigners invading the shores.

NEW ZEALAND.

There seems to be serious work in New Zealand. The natives as every one knows, are of a bold and warlike nature, and appear to be determined to resist the Europeans in taking possession of their lands.

In the war now waging between the natives and the colonists, the latter appear to have enough to do, to defend themselves.

Mining operations have been impeded, and the militia have been called out to assist the regular soldiers. The colonists however appear to have confidence in the ability of General Cameron who is in command there, and we think that notwithstanding some temporary success gained by the enemy, that the reestablishment of British Supremacy is scarcely a matter of doubt. It is certainly a pity that anything should exist to prevent persons from settling in these islands, which, it is said, have the finest soil and most salubrious climate in the world.

FINANCES.

Nothing can be more mean or malicious than the manner in which the Opposition are mis-stating facts to mislead the people. The present ministry is charged with extravagance, and the grossest untruths are fabricated to make it appear so. They forget to tell, that the additional expenditure is in consequence of the extravagance and corruption of the late Cartier-Macdonald administration. They never mention that the present Ministry has spent more than a half million of dollars extra upon the Militia. They never publish the fact, that Mr. Galt had annually to borrow a couple of millions to meet the deficiency in the public revenue that the misrule of his party caused. Not they. They are perfectly still upon these points; but the people understand them. If Mr. Holton can only succeed in inaugurating the system of retrenchment that he has foreshadowed in his speeches, we are sure that the Province will have cause to bless the day that the reins of power fell from the hands of the "corruptionists" into the hands of those who, by their conduct and acts, show that they have the interest of their country deeply at heart.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

Lord John Russell lately made a very important and conciliatory speech in Scotland. He justified England in recognising the Confederates as belligerents, and refuted the imputations brought therefor by many in the North against England. With regard to the Blockade, he said, even if the interests of England demanded that she should break it, she preferred the path of honor. He distinctly showed that the Government had not sufficient evidence to stop the Alabama, and drew a strong line of distinction between the building of ordinary vessels and steam rams which are, in themselves, found for acts of violation, and might be used without even touching Confederate shores. He emphatically stated that it was the intention of the Government to remain neutral—to act precisely as it would like to be done by, under similar circumstances—but that it would not yield one jot of right, by the menace of foreign powers. He complimented Secretary Seward and the American Government generally for the fairness, in which matters of difference had been discussed. He concluded by denouncing all attempts to create difficulties between England and America, and by expressing sentiments of friendship and amity towards the Northern States.

EXODUS.

A great many people deplore the departure of Canadians to the other side, and hence the cry is made that the population is decreasing. This, however, is not so; for a very large number of Americans who have skedaddled from the other side to escape the draft, have been filling up our towns and villages. The consequence of the skedaddling and the draft is, that wages have increased greatly on the other side, and employers much prefer Canadians, who are more likely to stay with them for some length of time, as they are not liable to the draft. Most of these, no doubt, will return when things "take a turn." The skedaddlers for our hardy mechanics and laborers, would, indeed, be as the yankees phrase it, a bad "swoop."

The Schooner Orion of Hamilton was burned on the evening of Sunday last, in the deep cut near Port Robinson. The captain John Dingwell was drowned.

AMERICAN NEWS.

The news from General Rosecrans's command is very meagre. On the 5th, the Confederates opened on his position at low range, the longest being three, and the shortest two and seven-tenths miles. No damage was done. General Rosecrans has heavy Parrott guns so posted as to prevent the enemy taking any heavy artillery up the mountain, even if they have any guns of large caliber this side of Atlanta, with which place railroad communication has been cut of at a point between it and Marietta, by the burning of a trestle bridge on that branch of the Memphis and Charleston railroad.

An expedition under Gen. Wheeler sent out by Gen. Bragg, to interrupt Rosecrans proved very successful. He captured McMinnville, destroyed the track below Murfreesboro', burnt bridges, and captured the trains en route to Gen. Rosecrans's army. Beyond the few men who were hurried to the point from Nashville immediately after the defeat, there is no assurance that any considerable body of troops have reached the Army of the Cumberland. Gen. Hooker with his command is in all probability somewhere between Nashville and Murfreesboro', waiting for the repair of the railroad. In the meantime, the confederates have opened a fire which reaches the heart of General Rosecrans's camp. He states officially that it does not so far amount to much; but the position is not a very pleasant one. We now hear, by way of Memphis, that Gen. Johnston is prepared to intercept the reinforcements of General Sherman and McPherson, which are hastening to General Rosecrans's relief by way of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. As two thirds of the the line is in confederate territory, the Federals will have difficulty to reach their destination. The confederates are straining all their energies as they say that victories are useless unless they can crush Rosecrans before reinforcements reach him.

Five rebel deserters arriving at Washington report positively that but two divisions of General Longstreet's corps reinforced General Bragg, one remaining behind. One division of General Ewell's corps had been previously sent to Charleston, but was soon transferred over the Memphis and Charleston railroad to Atlanta.

The prospect of a great battle at an early hour is growing stronger.

The news from Charleston is unimportant. Activity still prevails on the part of the federal forces, and the works are rapidly progressing. There was considerable firing on the evening of the 5th inst. between the federal batteries and the confederate works, on James Island. Fort Sumter was also shelled for a short time. A heavy cloud of smoke was noticed over James Island the same evening, and was thought to be from a fire in Charleston. The Washington Republican professes to have the authority of General Gilmore and Admiral Dahlgren for stating that all the reports of a disagreement between them as to the operations against Charleston are false. They declare that there has never been any other than the best of feeling existing from the time they assumed their respective commands.

The federals are now preparing for another attack.

The Washington correspondent of the Commercial states, that the city was somewhat startled this morning at the authentic news from the Rapidan, that the rebel army had abandoned its late position of the south bank of the stream, and that our cavalry had already encountered one of its retreating columns. This intelligence was rendered exciting by the wide-spread rumour, founded merely on inference, doubtless, that the retrogade movement of Lee simply meant the resumption of the offensive by a flank movement around the inside of the Warrenton line, to the north bank of the Rapidan, thus placing the rebel forces between Meade and Washington, after the manner in which Stonewall Jackson flanked Pope on the same ground. If these really be the rebel plans, they have been fairly thwarted. Gen. Meade is not the man to be caught in so old a trap.

It will soon be seen whether this presages a flank movement upon Meade's right, or is intended as a movement to Richmond.

Gold is still on the rise yesterday it closed at 54½ premium.

THE OPPOSITION.—NOT USELESS.

The factious course of the present Opposition is reprehensible in the highest degree; still, a strong Opposition, confined to its legitimate sphere, is not without its benefits to the country. It keeps a ministry within proper bounds, and acts as a check on every attempt to deviate from its promises and policy, and secures the safety of the country from mierule and extravagance. The present Ministry has had and has a very strong Opposition to contend against; indeed, the two parties in the House—the party in power and the party out of power—are too nearly balanced for the successful development of any scheme or measures the Administration has in hand for the benefit of the country. One thing is certain that the present Ministry has been closely watched, and their doings thoroughly ventilated. Perhaps this has been well. At any rate, it has come out on in a highly satisfactory manner from the ordeal it has undergone. Every item of expenditure has been again and again scrutinized and canvassed, and every measure denounced and torn to pieces by its opponents, and it has triumphantly defied its opponents to point out an instance of extravagance, or to devise better schemes or measures than those submitted. We feel convinced that the Ministry is to-day more popular with the great body of the people than it was at the opening of Parliament; and we feel convinced, also, that the Opposition has in no small degree assisted in producing this result.

LABOR IN ENGLAND.

The London Globe in a late article regrets that crops have been permitted to rot for want of hands to pick them. It says it was a question of price, for almost any price has been offered to draw hands. As much as two guineas have been made even by women, and that in the purely unskilled labor of hop-picking. This arises from the non-coming over of harvesters from Ireland—so many having emigrated from that country that there are none to spare.

PETERBOROUGH BRASS BAND.

We see that both the Globe and Leader speak in very flattering terms of our band, who, on the evening of their arrival there, serenaded the offices of both these papers. We understand that the Peterborough Band was the only one from a distance. Peterborough always comes out No. 1 in anything it goes into.

BUCHANAN.

The Hamilton people are terribly annoyed at their member about the defeat of the Bill he so ostentatiously supported, but which, it is hinted, he did not care much about carrying. His constituents attribute its defeat to his opposition to the Ministry; indeed, he himself has said as much. The Ministry, however, did not interfere in the matter at all; but had Mr. Buchanan fulfilled his promises of giving the administration a liberal support, there is doubt that his Bill would have found better support than it did and the Hamiltonians more pleased with their eccentric member than they are. Independent members, except they are INDEPENDENT, do not amount to much.

ELOPEMENT.

A Mrs. Campbell wife of a lake Captain, residing in Hamilton, lately eloped with a fishmonger named Davis. Mrs. C. is described as being fine looking, and Davis the contrary. Therre is however no accounting for tastes. They were arrested, and some very "cooing" letters read, but were dismissed and are now enjoying, we believe, the pleasure of each others society. Davis is a married man.

FINANCIAL COMMISSION.

The Leader has a poor memory. In one issue it stated that the cost to the country of the Financial Commission was $11,000. In a late issue, it makes the cost to be $25,000—or more than twice as much as it had previously stated. The Leader in subserving party purposes, should at least try to be consistent.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The news from British Columbia seems highly cheering. Gold is found in great quantities. But at the same time it is but fair to say that the lucky finders are but small in number in comparison with those who are not "lucky." If young men would work as hard at home as they must in Columbia, they would soon get rich even here.

COUNTERFEIT AMERICAN COIN.

The Montreal papers state, that a considerable amount of counterfeit coin is in circulation in that city. It consists of quarters bearing the date of 1834. The Mercury says they have made their appearance in Quebec. As they are well executed, it would be well for our merchants to be on their guard.

Do YOU deal in Tinware? If so, read A. Stewart's advertisement in to-day's issue. That "Canada" stove is something new. If half of what is claimed for it is true, it is a money saving affair. Call and see it. Stewart makes no charge for calling.

T. Leonard has removed his Boot and Shoe store to Coulter & Stevenson's block. He has a fine stock on hand.

We have received the first number of the Colborne Times, published in Colborne, by Mr. G. M. Kelly. Also, the first number of the weekly Visitor, a temperance paper published in Toronto, by Mr. P. H. Stewart. They are both neatly got up, and ought to succeed. We extend the right hand of fellowship to our new confreres.

Grand Military Inspection.—The King of Italy, Victor Emmanuel, will shortly have a grand military inspection in the environs of Milan, when 300 pieces of artillery completely horsed and manned, will be manœuvred before him. This branch of the military service of Italy is represented as being extremely good, and this branch of the Italian army is acquiring an important development. The fleet is to assemble off Genoa in the ensuing month and undergo a similar inspection.

Seed Grain.—A few years ago the Legislature granted a sum of money to enable farmers who had suffered from a bad harvest to purchase seed. Early this session a Committee was appointed to inquire into the disposal of this money, and their first report has just been laid before the House. This report states that £200 were paid to Mr. T. L. Terrill for indigent agriculturists on Stanstead, but never distributed, and that this money is still a matter of dispute between Mr. Terill and the Treasurer of the County Agricultural Society. The Committee therefore recommend that steps be taken to recover the amount from Mr. Terrill. Such conduct should not be passed over.

Experiments with the Armstrong Guns.—The Army and Navy Gazette regrets to state that in the late experiments with the Armstrong guns, at Newhaven, the defects of the lead-coated shot and fine grooving were very apparent, as happened at the previous practice. With the full charge of 12 lbs., several of these shells burst at the muzzle, and one in the gun itself, cutting up the grooving, while others of the shells were stripped of their lead covering and fell short. Last Thursday's experiment, which was conducted partly to try the fuses, showed that the 110-pounder could not be depended upon in the hour of greatest need in a close hand to hand contest, and has established the fact that the peculiar nature of the Armstrong rifling rendered it very difficult, if not impossible, to obtain a safe fuse for the gun.

A Strong-minded Woman.—The Albany Argus gives the following account of one of them: Mrs. Dr. Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck, who lives in Wallkill, won't pay taxes because she can't vote. Last month she was notified by the highway overseer of the town to appear on a certain day, with shovel in hand, to work out her highway tax. She appeared on the appointed day with her fire shovel, and went to work, but only for five days, when her tax was for ten and a half. She was thereupon arrested upon the complaint of the overseer. He complains that he "gave Lydia Sayer Hasbrouck, who resides in said district, and is assessed to work ten and a half days on the highways therein, notice to appear on the 9th day of September, with a good shovel, on the road near the house of A. G. Tonley, to do such work, and that the said L. Sayer Hasbrouck did so appear with a small fire shovel, whereupon the said deponent furnished the said Hasbrouck with a good shovel, and directed her to assist in filling the wagons that were on the ground, but that the said Hasbrouck did not work faithfully, remaining idle a considerable portion of the time each load was filling, standing leaning on her shovel, talking and calling the attention of other workman from their work; at other times sitting during the whole time of filling the wagon, sometimes with one hand tossing pebbles into the wagon, and at others reading a paper."

To the Editor of the Examiner.

PRESENTATION.

Mr. Editor,—In behalf of the Loyal Orange Lodge No. 549, permit me to acknowledge, through your excellent paper, a very handsome presentation made by Brothers Phillips and Linfoot to our Lodge, consisting of a large and well executed Oil Painting, representing King William III. on his gallant steed, and other emblems of the Order. The painting will highly adorn our Hall: while, at the same time, it will serve to inspire us with those time-honored and philanthropic feelings to our beloved Protestantism, which warmed the heart of our founder while crossing the Boyne, and filling the air with his accents: "Come on! Come on, my boys! Come on!"

Changes on the Grand Trunk Railway.—We notice, from announcement in our Portland contemporaries, that Mr. Henry Bailey has been appointed Superintendent of the Eastern District of the Grand Trunk Railway, that is, the section between Montreal and Portland, in the place of Mr. Corser. Part of this District, from Montreal to Richmond, was formerly under the charge of the late Mr. Freer. The whole length is 293 miles, and the charge of it, as Superintendent, is one of importance. The office of Assistant Manager, which Mr. Bailey has for many years held, is, we believe, to be hereafter abolished, it having, to some extent become superfluous. Mr. Brydes performing himself the duties of the two offices of Manager and Assistant Manager, which his aptitude for departmental administration enables him to do by the aid of intelligent private secretaries who write short-hand for taking down orders. The whole road of 1,090 miles will, therefore, be under the immediate charge of a Managing Director and three Superintendents, as heads of divisions.

Subserviency to Romish Saints.—On the 21st August, St. Spiro was taken out for a walk in Corfu, and the English guns—the Protestant guns—fired nineteen rounds in his honor. It is these things that cause Sir Henry Storks to lose the good opinion of the garrison. There is a vast difference between toleration and subservitency.—Scotch paper.

CANADA.

(From the London Times.)

As to the value of a share in the destiny of the great Yankee nation, we must leave the Canadians to form their own estimate. The people who once formed the United States have, no doubt, an important destiny. It does not look very hopeful at present, enveloped in the glare and gloom of war, devastation and debt. But we will only ask the Canadians to consider that they would have to give up some certain and present advantages for the sake of this doubtful and distant destiny. At present they are to all intents and purposes in possession of perfect self-government. The appointment of a Governor General by the Crown, is almost the only restriction to their political freedom, and his authority is a little check upon the free action of their Legislature as the veto of the Queen is upon the English Houses of Parliament. As a member of the Federal Union, they would not have half the independence they now enjoy; and they must remember, too, that as matters look at present, the destiny which they are invited to share would very probably involve a sacrifice even of this independence to a military despotism. They enjoy, moreover, at present the certainty of an equal and impartial administration of the laws. They are sure of personal liberty, of the freedom of the press, and of complete security for property. In contrast with all these advantages, let them reflect on the presence of Mr. Vallandigham on their soil as his exile, for no other offence than that of free speech upon the state of siege in which New York is held, and upon the reminiscences of Fort Lafayette suggested by Mr. Seward's visit, and they will be perfectly able to judge for themselves of the sort of exchange they would make.

We urge all these considerations on the attention of the Canadians without any anxiety for their decision. Our hands are clean as far as they are concerned. We have set them up as a nation, lent them money for their public works, and supplied them with troops and munitions of war; and if they make their choice to stay with us, and will but show a reasonable willingness to bear a fair share of the necessary burden of defence, we shall be heartily glad to keep them, and quite ready to help them to the best of our abilities. We only stipulate that we cannot and ought not to do all the fighting for them. If, however, with their eyes open to the prospect, they prefer annexation to the United States, we are equally ready to let them go. We are quite sure they have no other alternative but these two. They could no more exist as an independent nation by the side of the United States than a lamb by the side of a wolf. They have to choose between union with us and annexation to the Federal States; and by the choice they make we shall abide. By way of bringing these consideration to a point we beg to suggest for their particular consideration at the present moment the following question:—They have lately shown an excessive unwillingness to provide even a reasonable force of militia to resist a possible invasion by the United States. If they were annexed to the Union they would immediately have the conscription forced on them by gunboats and artillery. Which will they choose—to fight freely and willingly for the defence of their own homes, or be dragged at the cannon's mouth to feed an alien struggle in the heart of a distant, foreign and unhealthy country?

Escape of a Kidnapped Kingstonian.

Some time last spring a young man named John Wilson, son of Mr. Samuel Wilson a respectable farmer residing in the Township of Kingston, left his home for the States, and having obtained employment he settled down to work in the neighborhood of Rochester. Things went well with him until about six weeks ago, when he was arrested by two U. S. officers, and carried before the military authorities on a charge of desertion. The kidnappers, who of course had an eye to the reward offered by the government for the arrest of defaulting conscripts, swore positively that their innocent victim's name was Wyse; that he had resided in the State of New York for the last five years; that he had voted at the State and Presidential elections; and that he was a deserter, inasmuch as he had been drafted under the recent order and failed to present himself for enlistment into the "Grand Army." Wilson of course protested strongly against his arrest, and offered to procure satisfactory evidence that he was a British subject and had only recently arrived in Abraham's dominions; but the gentlemen with the shoulder-straps

BY-LAW NO. 20.

A BY-LAW to authorize the issue of Debentures for the sum of Fourteen Hundred and Five Dollars, for the erection and furnishing of a School House, in the Village of Ashburnham, and for other purposes.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees of the Village of Ashburnham, have applied to the Corporation of the said Village, under the provisions of the Statute in that behalf, for authority to borrow the sum of money necessary for the erection of a School House, in the said Village, and for the purchase of Furniture therefor, and have furnished the said Corporation with an Estimate of the cost thereof, at the sum of Fourteen Hundred and Five Dollars, and have required the said Corporation to pass a By-Law authorising the issue of five Debentures for the following sums, and payable at the undermentioned dates:

One for $315.00,	payable 1st April,	1864.
One for 295.00,	" 1st April,	1865.
One for 280.00,	" 1st April,	1866.
One for 265.00,	" 1st April,	1867.
One for 250.00,	" 1st April,	1868.

With interest at the rate of six per cent., and providing and settling therein for levying an equal rate per annum, during each of such years, in addition to all other rates to be levied in each year, for the payment of the debt and interest; and that such Debentures shall be made payable to the said Board of School Trustees, or the bearer thereof, and be delivered to them for the purpose of and with authority to borrow thereon the necessary amount as aforesaid;

And Whereas, the total amount of the whole ratable property of the said Municipality, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is One Hundred and Fifty-two Thousand and Ninety-five Dollars;

And Whereas, the total amount required to be raised annually by special rate, for paying the said debt and interest is the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars, in each of the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867;

And Whereas, the annual special rate in the dollar for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for paying the principal of the said debt, according to law, is the sum of Four Cents and Three Mills in each of the said years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867;

And Whereas it is necessary and expedient to comply with the said application;

The Corporation of the Village of Ashburnham hereby enacts as follows:

I. That, for the purpose aforesaid, Five Debentures of the Corporation aforesaid, for the sums hereunder mentioned, and payable at the undermentioned dates, to the said Board of School Trustees, or bearer, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum:

One for $312,	payable 1st April,	1864.
One for 295,	" 1st April,	1865.
One for 280,	" 1st April,	1866.
One for 265,	" 1st April,	1867.
One for 253,	" 1st April,	1868.

be issued by this Corporation, all such Debentures to be made payable at the Office of the Treasurer in Ashburnham.

II. That the said Debentures, when issued, shall be sealed with the Seal of the said Corporation, and be signed by the head thereof.

III. That the said Debentures shall be delivered to the said Board of School Trustees, and disposed of by them for the purposes aforesaid, and for no other use or purpose whatever.

IV. That for paying the said debt and interest a special rate per annum of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar, be raised, levied and collected, on the assessed annual value of the whole ratable property for the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, in addition to all other rates, and paid over to the said Treasurer.

V. That this By-Law shall take effect upon and from the date of the final passing thereof.

VI. That a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Saturday, the 31st day of October instant, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the forenoon.

LOVE LIGHTENS LABOUR.

A good wife rose from the bed one morn,
And thought o'erh a nervous dread
Of the pile of clothes to be washed, and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed. [field,
There's the meals to get for the men in the
And the children to fix away [chirpers,
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and
And all to be done that day.

It had rained that night, and all the wood
Was as wet as it could be;
There were puddings and pies to bake besides
A loaf of cake for tea.
And the day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily, she said,
"I wonder has Heaven what good wives know
They would be in no haste to wed?"

"Jennie, what think you I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well;
And a flush crept up to the bronzed brow,
And his eyes had tenderly fall:
"It was this," he said, and coming near,
He smiled, and stopping down, [the best
Kissed her cheek—"'twas this, that you were
And the dearest wife in town!"

The farmer went back to the field, and the wife
In a smiling and absent way,
Sang snatches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day. [clothes
And the pain in her head was gone, and the
Were white as the foam of the sea;
Her bread was light, and her butter was sweet
And golden as it could be. [breath,

"Just think," the children all called in a
"Tom Wood has gone off to sea!
He wouldn't I know, if he only had
As happy a home as we." [smiled
The night came down, and the good wife
To herself as she softly said;
"'Tis so sweet to labor for those we love,
It's not strange that maids will wed!"

Varieties.

The blessing a man most desires to fall into his lap is women.

Dean Swift recommended a tax on female beauty, and to leave every lady to rate her own charms.

There is a phrenologist in London who can tell the contents of a barrel by examining its head.

"Boy, where does this road go to?" "I don't think it goes anywhere. I always see it every morning."

A man out west is so great a miser that he uses only one eye at a time to save the other.

If an empty purse could speak, what lording sentiment it would express! You'll find no change in me.'

Why is the letter O like the equator? Because it is a circle dividing the gl-o-be into two equal parts.

"Are you the mate," said a man to the Irish cook of a vessel in port. "No," said he, "but I'm the man as boils the mate."

A Lawyer, on his passage from Europe, observed a shark, and noted a sailor what it was, who replied, "Well, it's a shark, but us sailors call 'em sea-lawyers."

Leave your grievances as Bonaparte did his letters, unopened for three weeks, and it is astonishing how few of them, at the end of that time, will require answering.

Swift used to say that the people of this generation had imbibed just enough religion to hate, but not nearly enough to love one another.

A new stove has been invented for the comfort of travellers; it is to be put under their feet, with a mustard plaster on the head which draws the heat through the whole body.

What is the difference between an attempted homicide and a Hazzlehire hog butchery? One is an assault with an intent to kill, and the other is a kill with intent to salt.

A tipsy Irishman who was leaning against a lamp-post as a funeral procession was passing by, was asked who was dead. "I can't exactly say sir," said he, "but I presume it is the gentleman in the coffin."

What is the principal difference between the swallow and cat? It is no admitted fact that one swallow does not make a summer, but any cat can make a spring.

An Irishman who had blistered his fingers by endeavoring to pull on a pair of new boots, exclaimed: "By Saint Patrick I I believe I shall never get them on until I wear them a day or two."

THE LESS THE BETTER.—"I say, Brown, what a close shaver Jones is!—Why, he'll squabble about a cent."—"Well, what of he does? I'm sure the less one squabbles about, the better."

"I know I am a perfect bear in my manners," said a young farmer to his sweetheart. "No, indeed, John," said the young lady, "you have never hugged me yet. You are more sheep than bear."

The following explicit remark, rebuking avarice is attributed to a western clergyman: "The soul of a miser is shrivelled so that it would have more room to play in a grain of mustard seed, than a bull-frog would in Lake Michigan."

A Quaker, upon being asked why he did not venture to go to an election, at which the proceedings were very riotously conducted, and give his vote, replied. "Friend I do not see why I should endanger my own poll to benefit another man's."

"Ma," said a little boy to his mother, "I'll tell you who I think ought in duty to head the Polish insurrection." "Who?" asked the mother. "Why, Sheridan; because whenever he has had to cross a narrow and dangerous path, he has always been assisted by a pole."

'Parson I beg you will not mention the unfortunate circumstance again,' as the henpecked husband said when the parson told him that he would be joined to his wife in another world, never to be separated from her.

A young gentleman, visiting his intended, met a rival who was somewhat advanced in years, and wishing to insult him, inquired how old he was. 'I can't exactly tell,' replied the other, 'but I can tell you that as age is older at twenty than a man at sixty.'

Think of This.—There is nothing purer than honesty—nothing sweeter than charity—nothing warmer than love—nothing richer than wisdom—nothing brighter than virtues—and nothing more steadfast than faith. These, united in one mind, from the purest, sweetest, warmest, brightest and most steadfast happiness.

"With the Author's Compliments."—A suitor having gained the affections of a daughter of Professor Wilson, waited upon "papa" and stated in case—of which the Professor had a previous inking. The young gentleman was directed to desire the lady to come to her father, and, doubtless, her obedience was prompt. Professor Wilson had before him to review some work, on the fly-leaf of which was duly inscribed "with the author's compliments." He tore this out, pinned it to his daughter's dress, solemnly led her to the young lover, and went back to his work.

THE ALBION.

Established in 1822.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, published every Saturday Morning, in the City of New York, and devoted to News, Politics and General Literature. This old-established and popular Periodical is now supplied to the public at the rate of

THREE DOLLARS PER ANNUM,

in ADVANCE strictly.

The Albion has been widely known for forty years throughout the United States and British North America. Thoroughly Independent in tone, it will be found to combine all the elements of Home Journalism, with the attention to every American incident that is likely to bear on British interests.

The Literary Department

will be enriched as heretofore, with the cream of English Literature. In connection with Art the ablest criticism will continue to be published in its columns. To these are added such Editorial Notices of current events as are deemed to be of interest to a circle of intelligent readers, whether British or American. The Albion furnishes, it is believed, a valuable weekly budget of information and entertainment.

THE ALBION ENGRAVINGS.

We have on hand copies of the Albion Engravings and subscribers and others can be furnished with them—at $3 each to subscribers and $5 to non-subscribers. A few proof copies of the Pioneer Nightingale print on India paper may be had. The following Engravings are also on hand:

Chalon's Queen Victoria, Luce's Prince Albert, Allan's Sir Walter Scott, Stuart's Washington, Mattison's Benjamin Franklin, Cope's First Trial by Jury, Buckler's St. Paul's London, Portrait of General Havelock, Herring's Three Members of the Temperance Society, The Castle of Indolence from Stanfield's Picture, Wandesford's Mary Queen of Scots, Landseer's Return from Hawking, Landseer's Dignity and Impudence, Landseer's Deer Pass, Dr. Kane at the Graves of Sir John Franklin's Men, Wilkins, Columbus suppounding the Theory of a New World, and the Falls of Niagara from an original drawing made for the Albion.

Engravings can be safely forwarded by mail or express, on paste-board rolls, at a charge of a few cents.

Money may be transmitted in registered letters at the risk of the office.

Subscribers in Canada and the British Provinces have to pay 26 cents per annum for American Postage.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
TWELFTH VOLUME.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The July number commences the Twelfth Volume of the Atlantic Monthly, and will contain such a list of contents as will entitle it to marked consideration. Nathaniel Hawthorn contributes for the first number of the new volume "Outside glimpses of English Poverty," one of the most interesting of his admirable English Sketches.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has written for it "The Doings of a Sun-beam."—Robert Dale Owen discusses "The Claims of Labor or Service," and presents some new views for the study of the people of America.—Gail Hamilton continues her popular "Gala Days." Professor Agassiz offers another elequent paper on mountains. And many other articles of equal value with the above, will be included in the forthcoming number.

Begun in 1857, the "Atlantic Monthly" has now reached its sixty-eighth number. Its circulation increasing largely from the start, has given it such a currency throughout the country as no other magazine has ever acquired. Its faith in impartial liberty as a principle, and its warfare against Despotism in every form, have made it a welcome visitor, far and wide, every month. It does not shrink in these our days of trial and battle, one jot of that firm belief in the brighter days to come which Right and Justice are sure always to bring in, but its future pages will shew an increased activity in placing before the midst of the people an unflattering confidence in the power of the North to limit the existence of a rebellion founded in cruel injustice and oppression.

The prosperity of the Atlantic enables its conductors to employ the most eminent talent of country in its columns. All the best known writers in American literature, contributing constantly to its pages, give to the sole right to be known as our national magazine. Its staff still comprises the following names among its leading contributors:—

James Russell Lowell, Henry W. Longfellow, Louis Agassiz, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathanial Hawthorne, C. C. Hazewell, T. W. Higginson, Author "Margaret Howth," Mrs. Julia W Howe, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Oliver W. Holmes, John G. Whittier, E. P. Whipple, Bayard Taylor, Chas. F. Browne, (Q. K. Philland. H. Giles, Walter Mitchell, H. T. Tuckerman, John Weiss. Mrs. H. B. Stowe, Harriet Marbineau, Charles Reade, "The Country Parson," Rose Terry, Harriet E. Prescott, Robert T. S. Lowell, J. T. Trowbridge, Edward Everett, Professor A. D. White.

The foregoing list it will be seen includes THE LEADING AMERICAN WRITERS.

And is such as to warrant the publishers in promising

The Best Essays,
The Best Stories,
The Best Poems,

Which Americen talent can furnish.

TERMS.—The Atlantic is for sale by all Book and periodical dealers: Price, 25 cents a number. Subscription for the year, $3 00, postage paid. Yearly subscriptions received, or single numbers supplied by any dealer, or by the Publishers.

OCTOBER.

On hill and field October's glories fade; [fly;
Over hill and fields the blackbirds southward
The brown leaves rustle down the forest glade,
Where naked branches make a fitful shade,
And the last blooms of Autum wither lie.

The berries on the hedgerow ripen well—
Holly and cedar, burning-bush and brier;
The patridge drums in some half-hidden dell,
Where all the ground is gemmed with leaves that fell
Last storm from the tall maple's crown of fire.

The chirp of crickets and the hum of bees
Come faintly up from marsh and meadow land
Whose reeds and rushes whisper in the breeze,
And sunbeams slant between the moss-grown trees,
Green on the grass and golden on the sand.

From many a tree whose tangled boughs are bare
Lean the rich clusters of the clambering vine;
October's mellow hazes dim the air
Along the uplands and the valley, where
The distant steeples of the village shine.

Adown the brook the dead leaves whirling go;
Above the brook the scarlet sumacs burn;
The lonely heron sounds his note of woe
In gloomy forest swamps, where rankly grow
The crimson cardinal and feathery fern.

Autumn is sad: a cold blue horizon
Darkly encircles checkered fields and farms,
Where late the gold of ripening harvest shone;
But bearded grain and fragrant hay are gone,
And Autumn mourn the loss of Summer's charms.

[awa—
Yet, though our Summers change and pass
Though dies the beauty of the hill and plain—
Though warmth and color fade with every day—
Hope passes not, and something seems to say
That all our brightest joys shall come again.

And if the flowers we nurture with such care
Must wither, though bedewed with many tears
They shall arise in some diviner air,
To bloom again, more fragrant and more fair,
And gladden us through all the coming years.

The sun sinks slowly toward the far off west;
The breeze is freshening from the far-off shore
So come, fair eve, and bring each weary breast
That sense of tranquil joy, of gentle rest,
Felt in the happy Autumns gone before!

Miscellaneous News.

How Grandmother Stopped the Thief.

I am a very old lady. I have very often told my grandchildren the story of how I stopped the thief. And now they beg me to write it down, that they may read my story themselves. When I am dead they mean. And so I write it.

When I was a little girl, I lived alone in an old country farm house with my father. Your great grandmother died, as you have heard, when I was born, and so I was my father's only companion. Dearly I loved him, and tenderly he talked to me of all his labors and of all his pleasures. At the time I write of I was just 11 years old; a merry boisterous girl, with big fearless eyes, and a spirit of achievement that was always getting me into I could fill pages with my adventures, but I know you only wish for one.

I must describe our house. It was built in the days of Dutch William, by some one who had learned to love the houses of Holland. The dwleling-house itself was nearly a cube; a great cube of dark red brick. The front door opened into a passage that pierced the block, and ended by another door which led into our farm yard. There were two tall, narrow windows on either side of the principle door, and five tall, narrow windows on the first story,—a heavy cornice hung over this row of windows, and from it rose the steep roof, covered with curly red tiles. This roof did not rise to a point. It was surmounted by a kind of summer house of wood about seven or eight feet square, with a window on each of its four sides. This little chamber, which we called our light house was reached through a small trap-door. This trap door was in the ceiling of the great garret formed by the whole roof of the house. The garret could only be entered by one other trap door, which opened into my father's room. There was just space enough in the light-house for my father's writing table. There he kept his accounts not without some straining of his brain, with scrupulous exactness. There he wrote his letters, on those rare occasions when necessity compelled him to do so. There were his samples of corn, his rusty pistols, and his dozen drawers of indescribable odds and ends. There he could see the half of his lands, and exercise a distant supervision over his men.

Four times a year my father paid the rent for his hired land. The home-farm, as you know was his own. On the day before the rent was to be taken to the landlord's steward, the sum was always brought in gold from the bank at the town.

Such a proceeding might not be very wise, but it was hallowed by its antiquity. The money was usually kept in a bag in my father's own room. All these arrangements were well known to me. I shut my eyes now, and I see my father in his clean gaiters, and the neat bow that tied his hair; I see him ride off on his roan back to pay his rent, and I know every create in the little leathern bag that carries the gold.

All the tribe of house servants and laborers, who lived on our farm knew my father's ways as well as I did. But he was unsuspicious to a fault. One Friday evening my father had ridden to the town, and come back with his gold. All the maids and the men were sitting at their supper in our great kitchen, and I stood by the cosy fire waiting for my father to come down to them. He always came into their meal, and a hearty word to those who were nearest to him, and then retired with me to his own parlor, his supper, and his pipe of peace.

On the particular evening in question, he walked into the room, swinging something in his hand. It was the leathern bag that carried the money; but it was empty. I knew that its place was in the bureau in my father's room—not empty, but full.

"Father," I said "where's the money? Why haven't you locked it up in the bag?"

Everybody in the room heard my question, for there was always a hush when the master came among his men, and every one in the room heard his answer:

"Where's the money, missie? I mounted the lighthouse when I came in, to get the keys I left there in the morning, caught the bag in the corner of the table, and tumbled all the coin into the drawer. There it may lie. It's safe enough."

In an hour more, I had been dismissed with my usual kiss, and was shut close in my own room. I have said that I should describe the house. I have only partly done so. The great range of stables and farm buildings, at the corner of which the actual house was built, were partly made out of the ruins of an old manor-house that had fallen into decay with a fallen family. The only part of the buildings that showed any signs of architectural beauty was one gable end, where the stables abutted on the modern house. There stood still an old room on the third floor, with great mullioned windows, each for a gable of its own, that stood out from the old roof. Two of these large windows looked out to the west; and on the south side, which adjoined the modern house, was a similar attic window, apparently inserted since the dismantling of the building, for instead of mullions, it contained a rough sash. The base of this little window (it was about five feet in height,) was on the floor of the attic, and nearly level with the projecting cornice of the house. Between the cornice and the sill of the window was a space of about a yard. The staircase from the old house led from what had been the hall (now filled with garden tools and accumulations of out-door rubbish,) into a room on the first floor, and up into the top room with the three windows. At some former time it had been proposed to use both the old and new buildings for domestic purposes, and a bridge passage had been built between the first door landing of the old stair case, and the room which I occupied. The door which led from my room to the little passage had been since furnished with many stout locks and bolts, but they were all on my side. It was a special delight to me to escape through my own door, and wander about the premises. I had taken possession of the great attic with the great old windows, and there I kept my treasures, and did my best loved work, as my father in his light-house. My father condoned my independence, and would only say, as he bade me good night:

"Mind you lock your private front door, little missie. I would not have thee stolen."

On the night in question, I lay long awake. I heard all the servants who slept in the house mount to their rooms. Then I heard my father locking and barring the two doors of the passage, and ascend in his turn, passing a moment at my room, before he retired to his own. Still I lay awake, and grew restless in my bed. I began to think of all that I had done in the day, and of all I meant to do to-morrow. I was going down to fish in the beck with Beriah, the stable help, and Mary the dairy woman. I had been cutting a new hazel top to my rod, up in my sanctum in the old buildings. And where was my knife that I had been cutting with? My knife that my father had brought me from the town a year ago, and that I loved so very fondly? I had left it in the attic. Of course no one would go there. It was quite safe. But how silly to leave it! Could I go and fetch it? No, certainly not. My father would be very angry with me for going out in the night. I must go to sleep. But I should like to see how the attic looks in the broad moonlight that shines in my room. I cannot do any harm by going out. And I hate to lie awake. The Dutch clock on the stairs strikes eleven. The house has been quite still for an hour and a half.

I stepped gently out of my bed and stole to the window. How sharply outlined the shadows were. I remember the whole scene now. Great clouds were coursing over the sky, and presently the moon would be hid. I turned the key in the lock of my door. It moved so silently and easily, that I could not help moving back the bolts. In another minute I was in my attic. You may think that I was a very courageous girl, and very unlike most of the children you know. Perhaps children now-a-days have more foolish ideas in their heads than those of seventy years ago. I knew nothing to be afraid of. There lay my rod, and there was my cherished knife, its blade looking very blue in the moonlight. I shut it, and vowed never to be so careless again. How strange the room looked! Everything was very black, or very bright, and the broad mullions made a great stripe of shadow over the floor. I turned up to the little one. Opposite to me rose up the steep tiled roof, and at the top was the lighthouse, its vane shining in the clear light, and its windows looking just as though there was a candle inside. I had turned to go to my bed again for I was beginning to be conscious that it was getting cold, when I saw the window that was nearest to me slowly open. I cannot say that I was exactly afraid even then. I was spellbound with astonishment, and stood motionless to watch. The sash was raised, and a man cautiously got out. He moved awkwardly, and seemed to have his hands tied. Then he began to descend the roof very slowly, and very warily. He leaned back against the tiles, and lodging his feet and elbows in their projections, advanced inch by inch along the perilous journey, with his hands still in front of him. I had just time to recognise his features, when the great cloud came over the moon, and in its sudden gloom of the comparative darkness, I could see little. But I had seen enough now. The man was one James Connor, a laborer on the farm. He had come to the house some weeks ago, and though my father knew nothing of him, and he looked like a tramp, he had been received. His fellow servants had complained once or twice that he was a drunkard, but he had promised amendment. He was in the kitchen when my father had indiscretely answered my indiscreet question. What he was doing was clear enough. He had passed through my father's room before the house was closed for the night, had concealed himself in the garret till all was still, and had then mounted to the lighthouse to steal the money. He could not descend through my father's room without rousing him. Nor was it needful to do so. He knew the premises well, and was aware that if he could descend the roof, and gain the little window, he could slide down the farm yard, and so make his way whithersoever he would. All this flashed through my mind as the cloud fell over the moon. In a moment I was watching more eagerly through the night, as the dim figure crept insufferably downward. His were blue shirt and stockings and shoes, and a pair of rough breeches. In his hands he held his spoils, perhaps because he wore no pockets; perhaps, because, as his stupid look showed he was half drunk, and ran the risk of marring his plot, and imperiling himself for life by his folly. This I could not explain. I only saw him coming lower, lower, lower, with my father's gold clasped in his hands. The bottom sash was standing alone in the window, about a yard from the floor in height, and there was nothing between the two buildings. I was hidden completely in the dark corner of the window. I thought the man must fall. He reached the cornice in safety, and stood up for a second before he stept across. Then he stept from roof to roof, and in a moment was leaning over the sash, supporting himself upon it by his arms, and resting his feet on the gutter that ran round the wall outside.

All this time I had simply watched. I had no thought what to do. I could not run away for help. I was chained to the spot, I knew that if the robber was to be baffled, it must be done now. As he passed before he clambered over the sash, and as he held out his hands with their spoil within them, I struck them with all my strength. The suddenness of the shock affected what my weak form could never have done. The man was startled, his hands parted, and the gold rolled all over the floor. With a curse he clutched at my arm as I darted from the window, and caught it with a grasp that I feel to this hour. Had his power not been crippled by his dangerous position I should have stood but a sorry chance against him. He could only use one arm, for with the other he was compelled to steady himself on the window. With that one arm he held me, and raised his knee to step into the room. I do not know why he did not let me go. He could have caught me long before I could have given any serious alarm, and have silenced me effectually. He could not at the same time hold me and enter the room. All this time I did not scream. It seemed to me that the struggle was too serious to be interrupted, and I felt so intense an earnestness in the work of trying to escape, that I was prevented from uttering a sound. At last the thief contrived to hold my little wrist in his huge hand, and grasp the window with it at the same time. In a second he would have been in the room. He could have stunned, or perhaps murdered me in a moment—have recollected the gold, have descended into the court, and in those days, when as yet there was neither detectives nor telegraphs, have escaped. It was my left arm that was prisoned. In my right I held my knife. I was desperate, then; and though I was but a little, small boned girl, all the devil in me was roused. I fear I could have slain the man with small compunction, at the instant of the deed. I lifted the clasp-knife to my mouth, and tore open the blade with my teeth, and then I cut at the wrist of my foe as though I would cut it through. He started back with a cry of pain and fury, lost his hold on the window, and fell. I heard the dull, heavy sound of his body as it struck the ground below. My left arm was covered with blood I had shed. Then I turned around to rouse the house. But my young nerves remained strong only while the work was to be done. I staggered, and fell fainting among the broad guineas I had saved. I lay senseless for some hours, and then woke with a feeling of having done or suffered something—I hardly knew what had happened. It was still dark. I went to the window to see what had become of my antagonist. There was light enough for me to see a dark mass below me, which I thought could be nothing else than Connor's body. I turned my head to the left, and saw the first faint light of morning breaking through the clouds. In half an hour the world of the farm would be astir. Slowly I returned to my deserted chamber, and passed through it to my father's. It did not take long to assure him of being unhurt, in spite of my bloody night dress. Wondering as I told him my tale, he called some of his men, and we went out to see the enemy. He was alive. I felt a thrill of pleasure at knowing that, though I could have taken his life, so ruthlessly in my rage. He was alive, but so bruised and injured by his fall that he

ALEX. GRAHAM.

Peterborough, October 14th, 1863.

WHAT?

We, that is, the majority of the people in the County of Peterborough, are placed in a very peculiar position. We hold one set of opinions and believe a course policy to be best; our representative, apparently, holds another set of opinions and shows by his acts that the course of policy in which he believes, to be totally different from ours. Hence, there is direct antagonism where there ought to be concord and unity. This state of affairs is altogether undesirable and in the highest degree incompatible with a successful evolution of those interests in which we are all more or less intimately concerned. In the present position of affairs our representative is powerless for good; and his constituents must consequently be the sufferers. Local interests are secondary in their importance only to provincial interests; and if any county in Canada has important interests to attend to it is Peterborough. There is no need of attempting to prove this—we know it too well. Now, it is evident that those interests should be the special object of our representative's regard, and their development his special aim—and hence every rational and intelligent person would think that he should so comport himself as far as practicable—especially when these very things professedly constitute the sum and substance of his politics—as best to subserve and advance those interests and promote their speedy and healthy development. But it is equally evident that if our representative pursues the course he has done since entering Parliament—running counter to those who elected him—or rather who might have easily prevented his election—that nothing will be done—that nothing can be expected. The question, then, naturally arises what ought to be done? It is a question of more importance than it at first sight appears. That a large and influential section of the Province—as the County of Peterborough undoubtedly is—should continue for years to be misrepresented in the halls of Legislation, and its interests to be practically ignored, is, to us at least, a weighty matter—one well worthy of consideration and serious thought. What is to be done? Must, we submit to our fate; or shall we attempt to remedy matters and put them upon a more desirable footing. The latter course appears to us to be the better one—more consistent with expediency—with the dictates of reason and sound policy. But how? The second question involves a problem not easy of solution. The "how" is to be sought for and found out. This, we think, not impossible. Our representative, though evidently set in his opinions, is not a person wanting in common sense, and possesses not a few of the essentials of a good judgment. We hope so at least. Now, we opine, he must be cognisant of the fact that public men are not selected to fill important positions, so much to give efficacy to their own peculiar views and whims, as to represent and carry out the views and wishes of those who appoint them. A public man is, as it were, the reflex of public opinion. The Editor who honestly does his duty in his articles to the public, does not necessarily give all his opinions upon the different subjects; he must subordinate his own peculiar views to those which the country as a whole—or the part he represents—holds and wishes to be embodied into tangibilities. So it is with a member of Parliament. He is not elected to ventilate and advocate his own crochety notions (and almost every man has crotchets); but to give expression to and practicalise the sentiments and views of those who elected him. He is, so to speak, their exponent, and when he forgets this, he is wanting in his duty—he is unmindful of his obligations and responsibilities. If this aspect of things be the correct one, and we believe that all impartial thinkers will concede that it is it seems to us that our representative has been singularly wanting in his duty—has fallen far short of the requirements naturally expected of him. It may be that this has been an error of heart, rather of intellect. We hope so. We should be charitable. The christian code inculcates charity. We should, therefore, be careful in imputing motives to public men. We may conjecture what the motives were that led to certain acts or to the adoption of a certain line of policy; but as we do not absolutely know, we should be guarded in our language. The uncertainty should make us careful. We think it altogether wrong for any party to impute improper motives to their opponents from every man that differs from them. It is a bad principle. The action may be condemned—the motives may be all right enough or they may not—they can only be questioned. There is, no doubt, there has been many a bad act fathered by the best of motives. We simply say this to show the care that those professedly Christian, who, consequently, should believe with St. Paul, that charity is the chiefest virtue — should exercise on the sweeping condemnation of public men, because they do not come up to the toe-mark of their views, and the danger their is of impugning their motives and condemning them too strongly — more strongly than the facts of the case would actually warrant. Hence, as to our member, we will not impugn his motives—we have heard them impugned, even by those professedly his friends—but who are not his friends? We would fain believe if Mr. Cornea was fully convinced that he was acting in opposition to a majority of those whom he professes to represent, that he would be willing, would be patriotic enough to subordinate his own peculiar views and feelings to those of this majority, which he ought to think imperative and binding in their nature. Mr. Cornea must be convinced that he has in toto mistaken the sentiments of his constituents—that with all his experience, his knowledge in this respect is more limited than he imagined. This can be done in various ways; these ways we purpose to point out more fully in another article—if it be needed to do so. In the meantime the people should be astir. There should be no lying listlessly upon the oars. The honor and opinions of the County must be vindicated. The leading men thereof should let their protest of their Representative's parliamentary career, be heard in language deep and unmistakeable. The people in words and actions—likewise—should show him how strongly they disapprove of it. Let this done in charity; but let there be no ambiguity in the meaning it is intended to convey. Let this be done, and Mr. Cornea will realize his true position—an unsafe and unenviable one; will also realise that unless he is constrained to change his tactics—that unless he pays some deference and attention to the wishes of the people, whose sense of freedom and independence, will not allow them to see their rights trampled upon with impunity, though he may for a time, from the circumstances in which he is placed, carry things with rather a high hand—he is digging for himself a political grave, into which, at the first chance, his suicidal policy will hurl him! We do not wish this; but is their hope that this will not be the case?

THE SESSION.

The Session is over, and the prophecy of Mr. Cartier at Welland some short time ago, at the great Corruptionist jollification there, that the present Ministry would soon be ousted, has been unfulfilled, and Mr. Cartier has thereby shown himself to be a False Prophet. A lying spirit was in his mouth. Not only did the Ministry survive the time allotted it by Mr. Cartier, but it it was enabled throughout the Session triumphantly to baffle and defeat all the attempts and artifices that Mr. Cartier and his friends, with all their ingenuity, could devise or bring to bear against it. It is true that the Session was longer than was contemplated, and certainly not as much done as could reasonably be expected from the expenditure of time and money involved. This was not the fault of the Ministry, but that of the Opposition, whose factious conduct was of a character reprehensible in the extreme. Some very useful measures, however, were carried. Among the important Bills that have become law, we may mention that of Mr. McKellar for the collection of arrears of taxes on non-resident lands,—that establishing the "Credit Foncier,"—the two pertaining to the Militia,—and that for the better protection of Sheep in Upper Canada,—and also several for the government and regulation of Courts and Municipal bodies. So much time was taken up by the Opposition in moving non-confidence motions, that many important measures were prevented from being passed. Indeed more than half of the two and a half months the Legislature was in Session was thus occupied. The country will do well to bear this in mind. The "independents"—so-called by themselves, but who invariably voted the Cartier-Macdonald ticket—are blameable for most of this waste of time, and the squandering of the public money it entailed. It was in their hands to prevent it. When they saw the Ministry could not be defeated, we hold it was their duty, even if not very friendly to it, to give it a fair trial, and to assist in passing useful measures, by lending it their support and voting down opposition they must have well known to be factious. From the out and out Corruptionists, hardly anything better than what was reality could be expected; but from them, with their professions and de facto or implied promises, the country had right to expect better things. They may ive to repent their conduct in more ways han one.

AMERICAN ELECTIONS.

The late elections in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana have been decided in favor of the Lincoln Government. The Republicans are jubilant over the victories that have been gained. They consider them, in fact, a strong endorsement of the war policy, and as evincing an unqualified determination upon the part of the loyal States to prosecute the war to the furthest. The government candidates have had immense majorities. In Ohio, Vallandigham, who is now an exile in Canada, and who was the Democratic candidate for governor was, literally, 'no where,' his opponent's majority being over 60,000 So in Pennsylvania and Indiana, the majorities have been much greater than were anticipated, even by the more ardent friends of the Government. These elections will, no doubt, exert a marked influence upon those about to follow, That in New York, next month, is the most important, and is anxiously waited for by both parties. It will be remembered that the Democrats carried the last elections in New York, when Mr. Seymour, the present Governor, was elected. Hence the great anxiety about the result of the coming struggle. It is of the utmost importance to the Federal Government that it should carry the New York elections. No concealment is made of this fact. As the Republicans and war Democrats are combining against the Copperheads, it is more than likely that New York will follow in the wake of its sister States and give the Government a large majority.

300,000 MORE.

President Lincoln has issued another Proclamation, calling out 300,000 Volunteers for a period of three years, or during the war; not, however, for a term exceeding three years. This does not show much hope of a speedy termination of the war; but it does show a determination upon the part of the Federal authorities to leave no means untried to bring back the revolted States to their allegiance. This is the policy of the Lincoln Government; and the people of the North, or at least the majority of them, seem heartily to endorse it. It is sickening to think of the thousands that have been sacrificed in this fratricidal war, and of the thousands more that must be sacrificed before there is any prospect of a cessation of hostilities, as the South appear just as determined not to yield as the North are to make them do so.

AMERICAN NEWS.

A great battle seems impending between Meade and Lee, which by the time that this is read may have came off. Each by strategic movements during the past week has been trying to outgeneral the other. On the evening of the 15th inst., word was brought to General Meade's headquarters to the effect that a corps of the confederate army, supposed to be A. P. Hill's force, had moved from Meades front in the direction of Leesburg. A heavy reconnisance immediately started in the direction of Aldie, and any attempt at a surprise is said to have been provided against. More or less skirmishing has taken place along the lines and some firing on the old battle field of Bull Run, but as yet no general engagement. The same night the federal army was drawn up in line of battle, the baggage and transportation trains being sent to the rear, and the southern ordered to Alexandria. The heavy storm of yesterday has for a time put an end to military operations, and it is hardly probable that a general engagement will take place to-day. The confederate army tempted no new flank movements, and it is thought that General Lee will remain under the protection of the Bull Run mountains west of London county, the storm rendering any advance northward apparently an impossibility. The days following were occupied with skirmishing between the two armies. On the 18th Washington was filled with rumors and excitement throughout the day. Belief in the progress of the great battle within eight miles of the city was very general, but no engagement has taken place. On the 19th Lee had not crossed the Potomac, but the Federals seemed to be in the dark as to his number or whereabouts. No hostile demonstration has been made since the 7th inst. upon the army of Gen. Rosecrans, the batteries of the confederates on the northeastern slope of Lookout Mountain having been withdrawn. On the 14th our guns on the left and right opened fire, and General Bragg was compelled to remove his headquarters from Missionary Ridge, his signal corps at the same time being driven away from Look-out Mountain. A number of deserters from the Third Kentucky report that a brigade of Georgia militia on the 6th refused to cross the state line, when a collision occurred between them and the regular troops. The damage done to the Nashville and Stevenson Railroad, by Wheeler's cavalry has been repaired, the enemy meanwhile having been followed by the federal cavalry and defeated several times. The confederates are reported to be building pontoons, with the intention of dislodging Gen. Rosecrans from his position by a flank movement across the river. There had been no communication with General Burnside for several days, but this was not considered necessary for the success of his operations. Confederate papers of the 6th contain the farewell address of General Polk to his command, and also a statement that Jeff Davis in Person is about to take command of General Bragg's army.

Rosecrans it is said has been superseded.

On the 18th the Federals on Gen. Cook had an engagement with Wheeler's force, on which the former were victorious.

It seems that the Federals have been victorious in Missouri and Arkansas. On the 13th there was a general engagement in which the confederates were completely routed.

The Federals keep firing away at Charleston. The Confederates make no response but are busily engaged in fortifying themselves.

Burnside is in command in East Tennessee.

Gold was quoted yesterday at 149½, showing a downward tendency.

ST. DOMINGO.

The revolution in St. Domingo is still in progress. So far, the revolutionists seem to have been successful, and appear determined not to rest satisfied until they expel every Spaniard from the Island. The greatest ferocity characterizes the war, and towns and villages and plantations belonging to the obnoxious Spaniards are everywhere destroyed. The people, numbering some 150,000, at the time they were betrayed into the hands of a foreign government by Santana and his few associates, were promised the protection of a great power, with the introduction of all the means that would tend to develop the great resources of the country. But instead of these things they have been made subject to the grossest misrule, and been placed under heavy imposts and taxes which have been spent in supporting a useless set of Spaniard officials, while the country's interests have been left to take care of themselves. Spain, no doubt, will make strong efforts to put down the revolution; but the contest is one for freedom and life. Hitherto, the Spanish forces have been defeated and driven back. The revolutionists seem to be well supplied with good arms. They, also, apparently, know how to use them, as they pick off the Spanish officers in a manner highly distasteful to the latter.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The steamship Ocean Queen, from Aspinwall October 7th, arrived here recently, bringing Panama dates to the 7th. Gen. Mosquera had declared the United States of Columbia in a state of war, and ordered a levy of 8,000 troops. The Archbishop of Bogota had been imprisoned until he submits to the new constitution. President Carrera, of Guatemala, and Barrois, of San Salvador, had held an interview with no important result. Carrera demanded that Barrios should dismiss the troops, but Barrios declined, offering however, to resign and give a decree of amnesty if the allied forces would leave Salvador, which offer Carrera in turn refused.

D'ARCY McGEE.

It is said that this gentleman is about to make a lecturing tour through Upper Canada, for the benefit of his present 'fast' friends, Cartier and Macdonald. We think he will have a good time of it, judging from the discount at which Corruptionism in now held. It is dying out fast, and all the efforts of the hon. gentleman to give it vitality will we think prove about as effectual as the attempts to galvanize a dead body into life.

DISCOVERY OF LEAD AND SILVER

There is quite an excitement in the business circles connected with the Lake Superior trade, in consequence of the discovery of an immense deposit of Silver—bearing Lead in that region. It is said that the ore yields at least 20 per cent of pure lead, and that every ton of lead yields 25 pounds of pure silver—worth $100—besides the value of the lead. Marquett County is the seat of the discovery.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The Rev. Mr. Beecher is delivering addresses in England on the American Union. He has been sharply criticised by the Times. There is no political news of importance. There was an earthquake in England on the 6th inst. The great topic of discussion at present is Maximilian and the Mexican Empire. Maximilian, before accepting the Crown offered him, wants a guarantee from the European Powers, for the independence of Mexico. The Times thinks that they will not do so, as they have done with Greece. The La France, however, says that most of the Powers have declared their intention of recognising the new Mexican Empire.

The course adopted by Archduke Maximilian relative to Mexico, disappoints London speculators in Mexican securities. A considerable decline has taken place.

It is reported that Spain is amongst the Powers resolved to recognize the new Mexican empire.

The Paris Journal des Debats seeks in vain for confirmation of the report that Stephens is going to Paris with offers of emancipation to secure recognition. It ridicules the idea of emancipation by the South, and says the day on which it sees the Southern Confederation proclaim emancipation, it will consider it in a helpless state. The Southern statesmen will never raise such a bitter cup to their lips till the feel they are utterly lost.

The Paris Patrie repeats that Prince Czartoriski has, in the name of the Polish Government, demanded of France and England the recognition of the Poles as belligerents.

The Pays asserts that no such official demand has yet been made.

The war contribution of 8 per cent. on net incomes has been imposed on all house proprietors in Warsaw.

It is reported that Prince Czartorisky was taking formal steps on the part of the Polish national Government to secure recognition to the Poles, as belligerents.

The treaty of commerce between Russia and Italy has been concluded. It is also represented that very intimate political relations now exist between St. Petersburg and Turin.

The London Times regards affairs between Germany and Denmark as extremely critical.

The heavy tendency on the London Exchange was increasing by the apprehension of a complication from the resolution of the German Diet to invade Holstein.

It is reported that the French Government had advised Denmark not to consider the Federal execution in Holstein a casus belli.

The war in New Zealand is spreading.

The new Brazilian loan of £300,000 sterling, was introduced by Rothschild at 88, interest 4½ per cent.

Bread stuffs are quiet, but steady.

MR. O'HALLORAN.

The Opposition press of the country are down upon this gentleman, for the marked stand he took in support of the Ministry and in assisting them to vote down the non-confidence motions of its opponents. Mr. O'Halloran has come out in a letter, showing that he was under no obligation to the late coalition government, and that indeed some of its members used their utmost efforts to defeat him. He lets the Country know that one of his principal reasons for supporting the present administration was that he did wish to see the Grand Trunk influence dominant in the councils of Government. His choice was between the present administration, and a Grand Trunk one—he preferred the former. Who will say that he was not right? We have had enough of Grand Trunk Governments.

Helm's Foundry and Machine Shop.

There is nothing like enterprise in a man who wishes to succeed in business, and we are happy to say that we have got a good many enterprising men in our good Town. For instance, in the Machine and Foundry line, there is our friend Helm, whose Establishment is quite an Institution. He keeps a large number of hands at work, and turns out work, in quality and quantity, that would be a credit to larger places. That Patent Steel Plow of his, he says is superior to anything introduced into the County. We advise those interested to accept his invitation to give him a visit.

BAD TREATMENT.

In a recent number of the Globe there appeared a letter from a number of individuals who went to Australia by the Kangaroo line of steamers, from New York, complaining of bad treatment on board the "Sonora" of that line of steamships. The meat and bread were bad, other articles of diet were poor in quality or deficient in quantity, and, on the whole, the passengers deemed themselves shamefully treated. They were kept waiting, at great expense, in New York for over a fortnight after the steamer was announced to leave.

Those who wish to make a business should advertise liberally. There is nothing like it. They must let the people know what they have got to sell, and how they sell. Erskine and Millar & Bertram evidently believe this doctrine. Give them a call.

Reserve Strength of the Free States.—A few figures lately obtained from the Department of Agriculture tell a story which the world would do well to consider. Our total agricultural exports (exclusive of cotton,) in 1859—when we were yet at peace—were $90,819,556, of which Southern ports exported $19,736,365. In 1861, with half a million men in arms, and no Southern exports, they amounted to $137,026,505, and in 1862, with a million of men in the field (one-half of them from the rural districts) and no Southern exports they reached the sum of $155,142,075.

Buffalo and Lake Huron Railway.—Arrangements says the Brant Expositor, have been made by the Buffalo and Lake Huron Railway with the bondholders and the Corporation of Brantford, which need only the sanction of Parliament to carry them into effect. This obtained, the company will be able to raise money to complete the Branch Road from Caledonia to Hamilton, thus securing a valuable outlet to Lake Ontario; construct a bridge over the Niagara at Fort Erie, and thus complete the connection with the New York roads leading to the East; still further improve the Goderich harbor, and thus furnish inviting faculties for a large portion of the carrying trade from the West; and to the present rolling stock, and thus provide the means of transport to that increased traffic which the improvements mentioned cannot fail to secure.

NEW YORK STATISTICS.

The following statistics do not show the city of New York in a very flattering or pleasant light; it is deplorable to think of the amount of sin and misery in great cities:

In New York there are 100,0000 German infidels; 350,000 persons who don't go to church; 3,000 families without Bibles; 60,000 children who never attend school; 16,000 vagrant and homeless children who graduate thieves and vagabonds; 6000 sailors in port all the time; a floating population of 90,000; all sorts of bad books in circulation and in any quantity; 22,232 arrests by the police last year, three-fourths of which were traceable to drunkenness; 6000 places where liquor is sold; nine theatres, having an average attendance of 15,000 persons, and taking in $8000 per night; 20,000 abandoned women keeping up their end of the so-called 'social evil,' 2,500 brothels; arrests in 1862 equalling one in every nine, and commitments to prison, one in every twenty-two of the entire citizenship; the cost of crime, pauperism, and moral obliquity more than $3,000,000 this year; half a million of people living in tenement houses; 25,000 living under ground.

GOLD.

Three persons on their arrival last month at San Francisco, California, from British Columbia, deposited in the United States mint, 12,000 ounces of Gold—valued at $300,000—all being the product of their own labour and that of their employees—since the 1st of January last. Lots of Gold there certainly.

Mr. James Gardiner, agent for Beadle's Nurseries, St. Catherines, has on exhibition at Hastings Hotel, some 70 specimens of Apples, Pears and Grapes, the production of the same kind of trees which he is now delivering. We kindly thank him for the basket of nice fruit which he sent us.

The members of the St. George's Society, are requested to meet at the Hastings Hotel, on the evening of Tuesday next.

Several Communications were unavoidably left out.

For the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,

If you will be so kind as to give the following a place in the Examiner, it will show to the public the readiness of the Member for the Trent Division to serve his constituents, even in other respects besides his Parliamentary capacity.

Having some busines to transact with the Crown Lands Department, I solicited the attention of different parties at the Seat of Government, some of whom, at least, I expected would give it their prompt notice, but failed even in obtaining a response from any of them.

It then occurred to my mind to address the Hon. Bilia Flint, M. L. C., as a last resource, on the subject, and obtained his immediate attention; and within ten days the whole business was effected. And very reasonably feeling thankful to the hon. gentleman for his kindness and promptitude, I considered it due to him thus to give the foregoing publicity.

Yours, &c.,
ROBERT SHEARER.

Ship Building for Belligerents.

From the London Times's City Article.

Much surprise is excited among the impartial merchants in the city at the doctrines promulgated by casual writers, from day to day, on the question of neutral obligation and the Liverpool iron-clads. The law, as the commercial world understand it, is that vessels of war may be built here, for any state, whether belligerent or otherwise, provided they are not built and sent to sea with the intention that British subjects should use them for hostile purposes. The natural impression would be that this law should be strictly adhered to until changed by Parliament, and the aim of the persons who argue the matter would appear to be not to promote but to prevent the exercise of neutrality. They make no demand that measures should be enforced for stopping the supply of munitions of war to the Northern States, nor to the enticing of British subjects from Ireland and elsewhere to recruit the northern armies. The confederates may be shut down by English mute cannon, but the 6-1 rals must not have their cotton and tea seized by English built ships. In matters of this sort the only safe plan must be to declare that we are ready to build or make any instruments of which we can find customers to pay us—even a supply of Greek fire, if it should be wished for. Even the federals themselves go as far in their pretensions as some Englishmen are found to go for them. And only three weeks back the New York Journal of Commerce admitted that if England stopped the iron-clads, it would be only fair she should stop the supply of arms and ammunition to themselves. As to the argument that an international law to prevent vessels being built for a belligerent might at a future time prove highly beneficial to ourselves, all that can be said with regard to it is, that there will be time enough to consider it when the United States have signified their wish to change their present law, since there can be few who will suppose that if we now, without some guarantee, set an opposite precedent, that precedent will be held sacred in our favor supposing at any time we should be at war with them. There would be no objection to a discussion of the whole matter in Parliament, where the paramount necessity of keeping open our trading rights, and of not allowing them to be sacrificed to suit the desires of a government, to avoid temporary disquietude, would be duly argued but it is felt by many persons that these constant exhortations to the ministry to stretch or override the actual law in anticipation of parliamentary action are likely to prove very injurious, and also that they bear an unpleasant resemblance to the views of the federal politicians, who are ready utterly to disregard every point of their own constitution on a phase of exigency. When it was lately sought on high authority to frighten us into a seizure of the iron-clads, with or without law, on the ground that their departure would be a signal for the United States to attack us, a blow was struck at the cause of peace, which it would be difficult to repair. Every one must have noticed that the wild threats against this country with which the New York press inflame their ignorant and credulous readers have gained strength with every concession made, while the submission to France in the face of her bold defiance of all their most cherished ideas and dogmas is developed precisely to a similar extent. A system which tends to stimulate the worst points in the northern character is more cruel to the North even than it is hurtful to ourselves, and hence it is among the real friends of the respectable portion of the American public that the greatest regret is felt at the absence of dignity that may be betrayed on this side.

Prolific.—A German named Heoflich, residing five miles west of La Crescent, was married in Portage in November; 1860, to a healthy German girl. The week after their marriage they moved to Minnesota, on the farm which they now occupy. In August, 1861, Mrs. Heoflich gave birth to three boys, two of whom lived. In June, 1862 she gave birth to three boys and a girl, two of the boys and the girl living. On the 5th of this month she gave birth to two girls and a boy, all of whom were, as late as Tuesday of last week, alive and well. Ten children in less than three years is pretty good, even for this vicinity. The parents are proud of their success in the family line, and point with pleasure to their company of German infantry. Government cannot afford to draft the head of that family.—La Crosse Democrat.

A Man Robbed and Thrown into Seventy Dollar Creek.—A series of robberies of an atrocious character have been committed on board the Hudson River Railroad cars within a few days past, nearly all of them taking place within a short distance of New York city. Police and captain Hart have undertaken to ferret out the perpetrators, but no arrest has yet been made. One of the cases is as follows: "Mr. Landon, living at Mendon, Monroe county, New York, was robbed on Wednesday. He left this city in the Montreal train at half past 10 o'clock. This is a long freight train, with one passenger car attached. Mr Landon was sitting in the rear part of this passenger car. While the train was approaching Yonkers two ruffians dragged him to the platform and hurled him into Spuyten Duyvil Creek. He recovered himself and crawled out of the creek, covered with mud and water, and proceeded up the main street of Yonkers at about 12 o'clock in the night. A gentleman residing at Yonkers, noticing Mr. Landon, inquired of him who he was. At first Mr. Landon was unable, in consequence of the injuries he had received, to give any account of himself. On taking out his pocket-book he found that eight hundred dollars had been abstracted; but in another pocket were some valuable papers the thieves had not secured.

Mr. F. B. Crassour, doing business at 64 Beaver street, in this city, was also robbed. He left Sing Sing shortly after seven o'clock in the cars last evening, and on arriving at Thirty first street, New York, found he had been robbed of one thousand dollars in cash and one thousand dollars in bonds.

It is evident that a systematic plan of robbery had been devised, and is in operation. The police will undoubtedly be able to arrest the thieves; and the public, forewarned, ought to suffer no further losses."—Albany Statesman.

The Gold Question.—A New York contemporary puts the pros and cons of the gold question as follows:

The arguments in favor of the rise of gold are:—1. The probability that the rebels will continue to resist, and that the war will be indefinitely protracted, involving further large government issues of irredeemable paper. 2. The large volume of our imports, which is steadily exceeding the amount of our exports, and threatens an export of specie. 3. The steady diminution of the amount of loose gold available for duties and for export. On the other hand, the arguments against the advance of gold are:—1. The probable collapse at an early day of the rebel confederacy, in which event it would not require much financial skill in our Treasury department to compel an early resumption of specie payments. 2. The disbursement on 1st proximo of several millions of gold by the Treasury Department in payment of interest on the bonded debt of the United States. 3. The probability that the Department, having a surplus of gold from duties in hand, will use that surplus to depress the premium on gold it it threatens a serious depreciation of the national currency. 4. The steady absorption of United States bonds by European (and especially German) investors, which creates a large supply of bills, and tends to keep down the price of gold. Each view—the bull and the bear theory—has its friends in the street. As a general rule, the leading bulls in gold are foreigners and copperheads.

A Freak of Commerce.—Every body knows remarks a Troy paper, that sugar was often sent from New York by the Hudson River and Lake Champlain to Montreal. On the 18th inst., for the first time, a cargo of sugar from Montreal, for New York, arrived at Troy, via the Champlain Canal. The Canada owner of this sugar formerly bought in New York, and usually received by this line some fifty cargoes a year; but now, instead of buying of the New York houses, he is selling to them, importing direct from Cuba to Montreal, instead of the New York houses importing for him. The same is the fact in respect to the importation of tea—Montreal formerly got her tea via New York; now New York gets that, and many other important articles of importation via Montreal. The change is undoubtedly owing to the necessity importers feel of seeking a neutral flag in order to escape the rebel cruisers. The war has had a very marked effect upon the Canada trade—the present trade being exceedingly light. There is hardly a load in this trade now passing the Northern Canal, where it formerly amounted to twenty. Little has gone into Canada this year but coal. Little comes from there but lumber.

MANHOOD

AND THE

VIGOR OF YOUTH RESTORED

IN FOUR WEEKS,

By Dr. Sicotte's Essence of Life.

DR. SICOTTE, (OF PARIS) after years of earnest solicitation, has at length acceded to the urgent request of the American public, and appointed an agent in Toronto for the sale of his valued and highly prized Essence of Life. This wonderful agent will restore Manhood to the most shattered constitutions, whether arising from excesses, the effects of climate, or natural causes. The time required to cure the most inveterate case is four weeks; and if used according to printed instructions, which are very simple, failure is impossible. This life-restoring remedy should be taken by all about to marry, as its effects are permanent. It is acknowledged by the medical press to be the greatest discovery ever made. Its developing powers are miraculous. Success in every case is as certain as that science overthrows ignorance.

Dr. Sicotte's Essence of Life is sold in cases, with full instructions for use, at $3, or four quantities in one for $9, and will be sent to any part, carefully packed, on receipt of remittance to his accredit agent.

BY-LAW NO. 20.

A BY-LAW to authorise the issue of Debentures for the sum of Fourteen Hundred and Five Dollars, for the erection and furnishing of a School House, in the Village of Ashburnham, and for other purposes.

WHEREAS, the Board of School Trustees of the Village of Ashburnham, have applied to the Corporation of the said Village, under the provisions of the Statute in that behalf, for authority to borrow the sum of money necessary for the erection of a School House, in the said Village, and for the purchase of Furniture therefor, and have furnished the said Corporation with an Estimate of the cost thereof, at the sum of Fourteen Hundred and Five Dollars, and have required the said Corporation to pass a By-Law authorising the issue of five Debentures for the following sums, and payable at the undermentioned dates:

One for $313.00,	payable	1st April, 1864.
One for 295.00,	"	1st April, 1865.
One for 280.00,	"	1st April, 1866.
One for 265.00,	"	1st April, 1867.
One for 253.00,	"	1st April, 1868.

With interest at the rate of six per cent., and providing and settling therein for levying an equal rate per annum, during each of such years, in addition to all other rates to be levied in each year, for the payment of the debt and interest: and that such Debentures shall be made payable to the said Board of School Trustees, or the bearer thereof, and be delivered to them for the purpose of and with authority to borrow thereon the necessary amount as aforesaid;

And Whereas, the total amount of the whole ratable property of the said Municipality, according to the last revised Assessment Roll, is One Hundred and Fifty-two Thousand and Ninety-five Dollars;

And Whereas, the total amount required to be raised annually by special rate, for paying the said debt and interest is the sum of Three Hundred and Twenty Dollars, in each of the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867;

And Whereas, the annual special rate in the dollar for paying the interest and creating an equal yearly sinking fund for paying the principal of the said debt, according to law, is the sum of Four Cents and Three Mills in each of the said years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867.

And Whereas it is necessary and expedient to comply with the said application;

The Corporation of the Village of Ashburnham hereby enacts as follows:

I. That, for the purpose aforesaid, Five Debentures of the Corporation aforesaid, for the sums hereunder mentioned, and payable at the undermentioned dates, to the said Board of School Trustees, or bearer, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum:

One for $313,	payable 1st April,	1864.
One for 295,	" 1st April,	1865.
One for 280,	" 1st April,	1866.
One for 265,	" 1st April,	1867.
One for 253,	" 1st April,	1868.

be issued by this Corporation, all such Debentures to be made payable at the Office of the Treasurer in Ashburnham.

II. That the said Debentures, when issued, shall be sealed with the Seal of the said Corporation, and be signed by the head thereof.

III. That the said Debentures shall be delivered to the said Board of School Trustees, and disposed of by them for the purposes aforesaid, and for no other use or purpose whatever.

IV. That for paying the said debt and interest at a special rate per annum of Four Cents and Three Mills in the Dollar, be raised, levied and collected, on the assessed annual value of the whole ratable property for the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866 and 1867, in addition to all other rates, and paid over to the said Treasurer.

V. That this By-Law shall take effect upon and from the date of the final passing thereof.

VI. That a vote of the Municipal Electors be taken on the passing of the foregoing By-law on Saturday, the 31st day of October instant, at the hour of Ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Select Poetry.

THE FAMILY MAN.

I once was a jolly young beau,
And knew how to pick up a fan,
But I've done with all that, you must know
For now I'm a family man!

When a partner I ventur'd to take,
The ladies all favored the plan:
They vowed I was certain to make
"Such an excellent family man!"

If I travel by land or by water,
I have charge of some Susan or Ann;
Mrs. Brown is so sure that her daughter
Is safe with a family man!

The trunks and the handboxes round 'em
With something like horror I scan,
But though I may mutter 'Confound 'em,'
I smile—like a family man.

I once was as gay as a templar,
But levity's now under ban;
Young people must have an examplar,
And I am a family man!

The club men I meet in the city
All treat me as well as they can;
And only exclaim, "What a pity,
Poor Tom is a family man!"

I own I am getting quite pensive;
Ten children, from David to Dan,
Is a family rather extensive;
But then—I'm a family man!

Varieties.

There are many of the greatest deeds done in the small struggles of life.

"Pa, what is meant by raw recruits?" "It means soldiers who have not stood fire, child."

What did a blind man take at breakfast to make him see? He took a cup and saucer (saw it!)

What word of three syllables specifies the time at which we should dance? Aten-deuce.

Why is a bookbinder a most charitable individual? Because he often covers a multitude of faults.

Dr. Franklin used to say that rich widows were the only piece of second hand goods that were sold at prime cost.

A recent philosopher discovers a method to avoid being dunned. "How?—how?—how?" every body asks. Never run in debt.

If this world is a show, what is the price of admittance? Sir, sorrow, a small trifle of sunshine, and a great deal of shadow.

The reason whiskey flows on election days. Because many intelligent voters go in for measures not men.

Not the man who does a great thing now and then, but he who is perfectly rounded and sculptured in his whole life, is worthy of our imitation, and deserves to have his life recorded.

An Irishman fights before he reasons; a Scotchman reasons before he fights; and an Englishman is not particular as to the order of precedence, but will do either to accomodate his customers.

A lady who was very modest and submissive before marriage, was observed by a friend to use her tongue pretty freely afterwards. "There was a time when I almost imagined she had none." "Yes," said the husband, with a sigh, "but its very long since."

The word "dun" is said to have originated in this wise: John Dunue, a famous bailiff in Lincoln, England, was so extremely active in his rough business that it became customary, when a man refused to pay his debts, to ask, "Why don't you Dunue him?" that is why don't you send Dunue to arrest him?"

A gentleman replied to a female Irish vagrant, who accosted him, that he never gave to beggars in the street. "If I knew where your honor lived," quickly responded the woman, "I'd be after calling at your house, and then I shouldn't interfere with your arrangements."

P. T. Barnum, a man who, with all his humbug, has cast his influence on the side of sobriety, is reported as having once said, in a temperance meeting, that as a great showman, he would give more for a drunkard who was prosperous in business than for any other curiosity.

A person complained to Dr. Franklin of having been insulted by one who called him a scoundrel. "Ah!" replied the doctor, "and what did you call him?"—"Why," said he, "I called him a scoundrel too."—"Well," resumed Franklin, "I presume you both spoke the truth."

Turn 'em Out.—"Hallo, steward!" exclaimed a fellow in one of the steamboats, after having retired to bed; "hallo, steward!" "What mars'r?" "Bring me the way bill." "What for mars'r?" "I want to see if these bedbugs put down their names for this berth before I did. If not, I want 'em turned out."

'I am like balaam,' said a dandy, on meeting a pretty girl in a narrow passage, stepped by an angel.'

'And I am like the angel,' said she, 'stopped by an ass.'

At a recent examination of girls in Cheshire for the rite of confirmation in answer to the question. 'What is the outward and visible sign and form in baptism?' the reply was, 'The baby, sir.'

A negro about dying was told by his minister that he must forgive a certain darkey against whom he seemed to entertain very bitter feelings. 'Yes, yes,' he replied, 'If I dies I forgive dat nigga; but if I gits well, dat nigga must take car.'

Neat Retort.—A lady, sitting in the same box of an opera with a French Physician, was much troubled with ennui, and happened to gape.—'Excuse me madam,' said the doctor, 'I am glad you did not swallow me.' 'Give yourself no uneasiness,' replied the lady, 'I'm a Jewess, and never eat pork.'

An Interpreter Wanted.—When Morice Margaret was tried for sedition, Lord Justice Clerk Braxfield, who always talked broad Scotch upon the bench, said, 'Ha'e ye ony counsel, man?' 'No.' 'Do ye want ten ha'e ony appointit?' 'No, I only want an interpreter to make me understand what your lordship says' This was received with a burst of laughter by the whole court, in which his lordship heartily joined.

One day Curran said to Father O'Leary—'Reverend Father, I wish you were St. Peter.' 'And why, Councillor, would you wish that I were St. Peter?' asked O'Leary. 'Because, reverend Father, in that case,' replied Curran, 'you would have the keys of heaven, and you would let me in.'—'Pooh! pooh! heaven, indeed!' replied the divine; 'wouldn't it be better for you if I had the keys of the other place, for then I could let you out.'
